COOLIDGE BANS EASTER HANDSHAKING

Washington, March 29 (I.N.S.).—President Coolidge has called a halt on handshaking with the thousands of tourists who annually visit Washington around Easter time. The new policy is said to have been adopted as a result of the discovery last year that tourist companies were "advertising" presidential handshakes as an attraction to prospective customers.

EX-HEAD OF TREMONT TRUST COMPANY NOW A BANKER IN MIAMI

Simon Swig, former head of the closed Tremont Trust Company, emerged from obscurity today as a central figure in a group of capitalists who have assumed control of the Tamiami Banking Company of Miami, Fla.

The company is one of the best-known financial institutions in Florida.

Among the associates of Swig in the reorganized banking company is Cole Oakley of Boston.

Swig is executive vice-president of the Tamiami Company. President is Wilson E. Walsh of the new Miami University, is chairman of the board of directors. Oakley is listed as one of the stockholders in the incorporation papers.

Swig went to Florida last Fall to negotiate for taking over a bank.

He has always contended that the closing of the Tremont Trust Company by the State Bank Commissioner was the result of a conspiracy to force independent trust companies out of business. Following the closing he tried to operate the Tremont Discount Corporation and engaged in minor enterprises.

GOV. WINANT TELLS JUDGE TO RESIGN

Concord, N. H., March 29.—Governor John G. Winant of New Hampshire today demanded the resignation of Judge Fred A. Jones of the Lebanon Municipal Court, who is charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of a woman in an automobile accident, and announced he will start removal proceedings in the Legislature if Judge Jones refused to retire voluntarily.

A municipal court judge cannot be ousted against his will without action by the State Legislature.

Judge Jones, a former Speaker of the New Hampshire House of Representatives, was driving an automobile near Hanover on January 23 when it jumped an embankment and overturned on the ice of a river. Mrs. Mildred Presley of Lebanon was killed and others injured, and Judge Jones, when he recovered from his injuries, was held in $2,000 bail to await Grand Jury action.

Trotzky Flays U.S. as Greedy Exploiter of Europe

New York, March 29.—Assuming Lenin's mantle as the prophet of Bolshevism, Trotzky came out in Moscow three weeks ago with a sensational five-hour address on "Europe and America," in the course of which he painted a lurid but fascinating picture of the titanic conflicts which will convulse the world in the near future.

The complete uncensored text of Trotzky's address is now published here for the first time

Sketching Uncle Sam as a greedy exploiter of feeble Europe, Trotzky, in a picturesque, sweeping and illuminating, portrays Europe as shrinking, disintegrating, and divided against itself. England he sees in a blind alley facing revolution. The rest of Europe is to him but a series of vassal states dominated by American capital.

When the shadows envelop the Old World, the two great giants will remain to fight for supremacy, America and Russia. Against America's wealth, Russia will lead the oppressed classes and nations of Europe and Asia, and emerge, of course, triumphant.

Organizer of the Red Army

The United States, which no longer tolerates any obstacles in her way, which regards every rise in cost of the raw materials she needs as a vicious attempt to deprive her of her sacred right to exploit the rest of the world, this United States is now opposed by a disintegrating and divided Europe. Poorer than before the war, Europe with her markets limited is fettered with debts, is torn by antagonisms, and is crushed by arrogant militarism.

The unprecedented economic advantage of the United States will not permit European capitalism to rise again, in spite of the conscious attempts of American policy to bring it about. American capitalism, driving Europe more and more into a blind alley, will automatically drive

2 SUSPECTS WHO FLED CITY SURRENDER AS HERO COMEAU IS BURIED

Investigation of a death threat received by Patrolman John Miller of the Fields Corner station, and the surrender of two youths sought as suspects, were the leading developments today in the hunt for the slayers of Frank J. Comeau, Dorchester policeman.

Although the police declared the threat received by Miller had no connection with the killing of his brother officer, they admitted it contained the ominous words: "You're next."

The two suspects surrendered at Station 11 immediately after the funeral of Officer Comeau, which took place with Governor Fuller, Police Commissioner Wilson and many other dignitaries present.

The police had learned that two young men, residents of the district in which Patrolman Comeau was shot to death, had disappeared Wednesday night, leaving Boston on a bus. It developed the youths went to Providence, proceeding from there to New London, Ct., by begging lifts on trucks.

At New London one of the young men wired home for money, and the police learning of it, set a trap for them at New Haven. Instead of going to that city they returned to their homes, surrendering when they learned the police were seeking them, according to their story.

After being questioned at the Fields Corner station, the youths, together with a third suspect, were taken to police headquarters, where they were fingerprinted and photographed. They were then questioned by officials, while their prints were being compared with the photograph of fingerprints obtained by

OPENS LAST BATTLE TO SAVE CHAPMAN

New Haven, Ct., March 29 (A.P.)—Gerald Chapman's petition to Judge R. S. Thomas of the U. S. District Court for a writ of habeas corpus against Henry K. W. Scott, warden of the State prison, in his effort to stave off execution April 6, offered by his attorney, Ray M. Wiley of Springfield, Mass., today was ten typewritten pages in length.

Three paragraphs of the petition alleging unfairness were as follows:

"The arbitrary manner and means employed in violation of the laws of Connecticut in drawing the jurors so that there wasn't and couldn't be and reasonable representation and proper apportionments from the

Mr. Wiley once before was before Judge Thomas on like mission, and from an adverse decision appeal was taken to the Circuit Court and then to the Supreme Court.

The petition offered today was somewhat of the same wording as that presented before. It alleged that Chapman, a Federal prisoner, was unjustly detained by Warden Scott, that his removal from Atlanta was illegal, that his case had been prejudiced, that his counsel had had no opportunity to see him and that he had been deprived of protection which courts should give him.

WALES IS BETTER AFTER AN OPERATION

London, March 29 (I.N.S.).—The operation upon the Prince of Wales for a recurrent ear trouble has been successful, attending physicians announced today. His condition is improving.

A bulletin, issued by the physicians this morning, stated:

"His Highness the Prince of Wales suffered a return of the pain in his ear, it being a sequel to influenza, and it was accordingly decided that a small operation was necessary. When this was done his relief followed."

Physicians issued strict orders, however, against his leaving York House. Although the Prince will be able to leave his bed and go about the city he has cancelled all immediate public engagements.

The King and Queen, who had gone to Sandringham for Easter, returned to London today and immediately went to call upon the Prince and learn of his condition.

$50,000 LOSS IN LOWELL FIRE

Lowell, March 29 (A.P.)—Damage approximating $50,000 was done in an hour's fire in a ten-foot building opposite the Boston & Maine Railroad station in Middlesex street at 8 o'clock today.

The greater part of the loss was suffered by Abram Smith, owner of the building and proprietor of the New England Rubber Tire Supply Company, selling automobile tires and rubber and leather boots and shoes. L. Gendron's market, adjacent, was a total loss.

The fire started from an oil stove exploding in the cashier's cage in the market.

SELLING HEAVY, STOCKS DROP

New York, March 29 (A.P.)—Another wave of selling orders swept over today's stock market, carrying scores of issues down 2 to 10 points. U. S. Steel common, General Motors and Hudson were among the fifty or more issues to establish new low levels for the year.

Attempts to restrain the flood of selling orders became futile as U. S. Steel broke to 115⅛, carrying down with it General Motors to 113⅛ and Hudson Motors to 77⅛, all new low prices for the year.

Fully two score other issues touched new minimum figures with the decline in special issues assuming sensational proportions. Jersey Central slumped 20 points, National Tea 10, Du Pont 8, and Woolworth, Pullman, R. H. Macy, Delaware & Hudson, Mack Truck, McCrory Stores, General Asphalt and General Electric 4 to 6 points. Easier credit conditions were reflected in the reduction of the renewal rate for call loans to 4% per cent.

4 SEIZED AFTER GUN FIGHT IN MEDFORD

Four young men, captured with two women after several shots were fired in the Modern Welding Company, No. 32 Myrtle avenue, Medford, were held in $5,000 each for a hearing April 5 on charges of breaking and entering in Malden Court today.

The prisoners, who the police say have records, with one exception, gave their names as James J. Badger, 20, of East Second street, South Boston, a false address; Christopher G. Ross, 25, of No. 125 Pembroke street, Boston, false address; his brother, Eric Ross, 28, of No. 102 Norway street, Boston, and Cornelius J. Haggerty, 25, of No. 219 Heath street, Roxbury, a false address.

The women, Mrs. Mary Ross, wife of Eric, and an 18-year-old South Boston girl, whose name was withheld, were released after questioning by the police.

The police say a charge of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon will be preferred against Haggerty if the revolver he is said to have thrown away by the police to have thrown away can be found.

Mary Beanchi rul of No. 74 Swan street, Medford, telephoned the local police early today that she heard the noise of an automobile outside the establishment of the Modern Welding Company, which includes an automobile agency.

DEMAND PROBE OF NAVY BASE GRANT TO JAPS

Washington, March 29 (A.P.)—The Senate Foreign Relations Committee was asked today by Senator Johnson, Republican, California, to inquire into a 2,000,000-acre land grant on Magdalena Bay, Lower California, recently given by the Mexican government to a Mexican-Japanese syndicate.

Senator Johnson's request was submitted to Chairman Borah, who said he, too, wanted all the facts about the concession.

Senator Borah previously had taken the matter up with the State Department, which, as a result, is expected to make inquiries as to the nature of the transaction. A recent newspaper dispatch from San Diego, Cal., said the syndicate proposed to produce vegetable dyes and rubber.

The land involved long has been regarded as an immensely valuable naval base.

SHOTS AWOKE QUIET MEDFORD DURING BANDIT CHASE AFTER BREAK IN MYSTIC AVENUE

GOVERNOR FULLER AT LAST RITES FOR COMEAU

Inspector James R. Claflin from the stolen automobile in which the policeman's slayers rode.

All three were then held as suspicious persons and will be looked over by eye witnesses of the shooting. It is said the descriptions of two of them tally with those furnished the police of two of the slayers.

KNEW COMEAU.

It was also understood that the slain policeman once appeared in court against one of the suspects.

The Miller warning, written with a blue pencil, was sent through the mails in a blue envelope, the address clumsily written as though by an uneducated person.

Patrolman Miller is said to have been forced to shout a man some time ago while making an arrest.

At the Fields Corner station, where Miller is on duty, as was Comeau, little information could be obtained regarding the threat.

ELIMINATE GANG.

Special Officer Cornelius O'Leary, who, with his partner, Leonard O'Connell, has been working night and day on the slaying of Officer Comeau, stated that the four men held in Bedford for breaking and entering had been eliminated as suspects.

Officer Leary, who went to Medford to look over the prisoners, arrested with two women after shots were fired in the Modern Welding Company, No. 32 Myrtle avenue, Medford, said they were too old to have been the slayers of the Dorchester policeman.

Officers Leary and O'Connell were today checking up the story of a witness who declared he recognized one of the thugs who killed Comeau as a former sailor in the navy.

The witness said while walking along Adams street shortly after the shooting a man ran by him. He said he recognized this man as having served in the navy with him and described the fugitive as being about twenty-six years old, short and thickset, wearing a long brown coat and a light hat. He added the fleeing man was dark complexioned.

WOMEN SAW SLAYERS.

The police have located two women witnesses who claim to have seen three men run out of the alley on to Park street, toward Sturtevant street, immediately after the policeman was shot.

These women said they were on the sidewalk only a very short distance away from the trio, and lost they got a good view of them. It is said the women could recognize at least two of the thugs.

In the presence of Governor Fuller, Police Commissioner Wilson, many other dignitaries and scores of policemen, the slain officer was laid to rest after services in St. Ann's Church, Neponset avenue.

Rarely is a police private accorded the honors given to Patrolman Comeau.

ESCORTED BY VETS.

Governor Fuller, Mayor Nichols, Police Commissioner Wilson, Supt. Crowley and every police captain in the department attended, the police in full dress uniform.

From the martyr policeman's home at No. 15 Bowman street, Neponset, where a brief service was held, the body was escorted to the church by a police detail under Captain Louis Lurie, department drillmaster, and Sergeant Cavanaugh.

The police color bearers, all war veterans, were Warren C. Perkins of the West Roxbury station, James E. Cochrane and Robert C. Butler of the Joy street station, and James Michaels of the Dudley street station. Police color guards were George A. Casey of the Jamaica Plain station and Daniel J. Gallagher of Roxbury Crossing.

HUNDREDS IN STREET.

Behind the police detail marched a war veterans' escort, made up of former comrades of the dead policeman in the 817th Field Signal Battalion overseas.

A solemn high mass of requiem was celebrated at 9 o'clock by the Rev. Fr. Patrick A. Scannell, pastor, of St. Anne's, as celebrant; the Rev. Fr. John P. Hennessey, deacon, and the Rev. Fr. Francis P. Foley, subdeacon.

The Rev. Fr. John H. Harrigan, pastor of St. Ambrose's Church, at the murder scene, together with his curate, Fr. Joseph Murphy, were within the chancel rail.

Hundreds of curious filled the street in front of the church as the casket was borne out and the cortege moved along Neponset avenue, while Traffic Officer Cecil Lewis sounded taps.

The pallbearers, all comrades of the slain policeman at the Fields Corner station, were John F. Lyons, Daniel J. Donovan, Francis P. Maguire, John C. Malone, John Flaherty and Samuel J. Grimes.

A dramatic touch was added to the funeral, when the cortege approached the Fields Corner station to which the slain officer was assigned. The police escort drew up to one side of the road, while Captain Matthew J. Dulley and the former comrades of the slain officer stood at attention across the street, the cortege passing between.

The Dorchester District Court had been closed during the funeral as a mark of respect, and Judge Joseph R. Churchill with court attaches stood in line with Captain Dulley and the policemen.

COMEAU FAMILY BENEFIT FUND IS STARTED

A benefit for the widow and children of Patrolman Frank J. Comeau of Fields Corner police station, who was slain while questioning a trio of thugs, was started today by prominent Boston and Dorchester men.

While contributions for the fund are pouring in, the fund committee, led by State Representative Bernard P. Casey and George E. Curran of the Governor's Council, will stage a benefit entertainment with theatrical and flistic talent at the Boston Arena on Thursday evening, April 8.

Only through the generosity of the public can the family of the murdered policeman be rescued from want, and his children be reared and educated as properly as the children of other parents, for whose protection Comeau gave his life.

Dorchester residents are counted upon particularly to swell the volume of contributions, but all Boston as well should respond to the call for help for the bereft family of one of its bravest sons, who had previously offered his life for his country on the battlefields of France.

Contributions should be sent to James J. Lyons, care of the Fields Corner branch of the First National Bank, and checks or money orders should be made payable to James J. Lyons, Treasurer Frank J. Comeau Benefit Fund.

A record of the greying fund will be published in the Boston Evening American.

Policemen of the various divisions will distribute tickets for the benefit entertainment at the Arena, beginning within a few days. More than 10,000 are expected at the benefit. Sporting goods stores and other places to be announced later will be distributing points for the tickets.

Representative Casey is chairman of the general committee of the fund. James T. Hartin is secretary and James J. Lyons treasurer. Councillor Curran is chairman of the entertainments committee, assisted by Arthur Crowley, son of Police Superintendent Crowley; Richard F. Tobin is chairman of the publicity committee, and Michael J. Curran, a former policeman, who was himself wounded on duty two years ago, is chairman of the ticket committee.

FIGHT FOR LIFE REVEALED BY CHAPMAN

The Boston Evening American, on next Wednesday, will begin publication of a series of six articles, titled "Mystery in the Shadow of the Noose," and signed by Gerald Chapman, alleged "super-bandit" who now sits in gray old Wethersfield prison in Connecticut awaiting execution on April 6.

In these six articles, Chapman will give to Boston Evening American readers his every impression as he counts the minutes that tick off his few remaining days, while his counsel makes a superhuman effort to snatch him away from the angman.

They will review his entire story from his impressions during his trial and conviction for the murder of Patrolman James Skelly in New Britain, to the time of writing, and they will tell his story calmly.

"RAILROADED," HE ASSERTS.

In his articles Chapman naturally declares he is innocent, that he is being railroaded to death and that the Connecticut authorities have no right to execute him.

He claims that the Supreme Court, through recent decisions, has supported his assertion that he was not convicted in accordance with law and he produces evidence to back up his charge that police officials testified falsely at his trial.

Chapman declares in his articles, also, that Colonel Donovan, assistant attorney general of the United States, doubts the authority of Connecticut to hang him.

TELLS STORY CALMLY.

The condemned man's story is of tremendous interest and gives, for the first time, the attitude of the principal himself, and this is the reason this paper prints it.

As calmly and in as matter-of-fact manner as a has displayed all through the days that have passed since the policeman was shot down in the New Britain department store, Chapman gives his side of the case.

"I will go to my death courageously, but all I want is a square deal," he says at one point, although he has not lost hope yet of winning his battle.

Chapman's articles will interest and hold you, from the first word to the last. They will begin Wednesday.

Watch for them.

nor in the police automobile. Arriving at the Welding Company plant, the officers found a big sedan parked in front. As the policemen scrambled out of their machine two men, later identified as the Ross brothers, smerged from the shop. The police say Christopher Ross had an automobile tire on his arm.

CHASED FOR MILE.

The two young men fled, with policemen on their heels, and were run down after a chase of nearly a mile. In the meantime Saliger had popped outside and was taken into custody.

The police say that when they entered the shop they found Haggerty stripping a car of tires by the light of a flash lamp. Drawing his revolver, an officer commanded Haggerty to throw up his hands, but the man refused to do so.

Dashing down the street, Haggerty boarded a taxi cab and was in a fair way to escape, when he was overhauled by Patrolmen Lennox and Prentiss in the police car, and taken to the station house.

Dorchester police were notified and Sergeant Shea and Special Officer Leahy were sent to Medford, where they looked over and questioned the four prisoners. They stated they resembled in a way the descriptions of certain of the slayers of Patrolman Comeau, but more definite identification is needed.

Stonington, Ct., March 29 (A. P.).—Charges that the antics of an "ape man" which has aroused curiosity in this town are an attempt to drive them from their farm were made today by Muriel Miner, 19, and her sister, Mildred, 16, who inherited an interest in the property from their father, Horace D. Miner, who died three weeks ago.

Their brother, Latham Miner, twenty-one, executor of the estate, backed the girls in their statement.

The girls have been living in the family farmhouse alone since their father's death, their mother having died two years ago. The brother takes care of another part of the 2,000-acre farm, living in a house about a mile distant.

The "ape man," who has been seen four times near the Miner farmhouse, they describe as a man dressed in skins. He appeared only at a distance, they said, and fled at the approach of one of the sisters. Other farmers in the township claim to have seen the creature.

The Miners ascribe its activities to a plot to drive them from the far min order that it may be purchased at a low price. They decline ft is one of the most valuable in that part of the State.

A HOME PAPER FOR THE PEOPLE WHO THINK
BOSTON, MONDAY, MARCH 29, 1926

GENERAL NEWS SECTION

'SPANISH' SPIKES' TO BE STYLE

Haverhill, March 29 (A.P.).—Milady will wear this Easter step-in pumps or strap slippers of striking color designs and contrasting overlaid trimmings, with the highest heel in history.

This announcement has come from Haverhill shoe manufacturers, who have just completed three million pairs of shoes for the Easter trade.

The new heel, called "The Spanish Spike," runs from two to two and one-half inches in height. It originated in the motion picture colony at Hollywood, and, according to the makers, marks the passing of the "flapper heel," the low, flat heel so popular for the past few years.

Keen competition is said to have resulted in the creation of original development in styles. Many bizarre effects in women's footwear will be seen this Spring, the principal colors being blonde, gray and parchment, with contrasting appliques or ornamentations sewed to the slipper. One striking development is the demand for snake skin or gray, blonde or parchment, with pastel shades of green or old blue trimmings.

In anticipation of a heavy demand, the manufacturers here have increased the volume of their output to the highest point in five years.

Styles for Summer footwear are expected to folow closely the Spring fashions, with an increasing demand for white slippers.

The Tampe demands that the League of Nations keep its hands off purely domestic French problems.

HELD AS FAKE DOCTOR WHEN BOY DIES

A charge of practicing medicine without a license was made today in East Boston court against Albino Iannacone of No. 23 School street, Somerville, when he was arraigned as the result of the death of a nine-year-old boy.

Iannacone pleaded not guilty and the case was continued to next Monday for hearing.

The Somerville man was arrested on complaint of State Police Officer Arthur E. Keating at the end of an investigation that began when the boy, George Tripi of No. 86 London street, East Boston, died.

The boy had been discharged from the Massachusetts General Hospital as impossible to cure of rheumatism, Iannacone is alleged to have represented himself to the parents as a doctor and to have guaranteed a curb for the boy.

Hub 'Flu' Cases Jump to 1,009 During March

A tremendous increase in influenza in Boston from 50 in February to 1,009 in March was indicated today in reports of physicians filed with the State Board of Health.

In March, 1925, only 374 cases of influenza were reported.

Lobar pneumonia, which in many cases has proved fatal, is also raging in the city. There were 850 cases during the present month. This is not much of a record, however. Records show that there were 817 cases during the same period last year. There were 493 cases during February, 1926.

Statistics of the health board show only influenza figures. Grippe, which is widely prevalent, is not a reportable disease.

In an effort to prevent as much as possible the further spread of the disease in the city, Dr. Luther W. Kelly of the Boston City Hospital staff issued the following "do's and don'ts":

1. Don't sneeze and cough into other people's faces without covering your mouth.
2. Don't shake hands or drink out of glasses used by others.
3. Avoid crowds and crowded places.
4. Keep your feet dry; and on raw days bundle up warm.
5. Inhale as much fresh air as possible. Keep well in the sunshine.
6. Wash your hands before meals and when you enter the house from the street cars.
7. Go to bed at once if you have a temperature and stay there until allowed up by a doctor.
8. Bathe your feet in hot water.
9. Drink plenty of hot nourishment if chills overtake you.
10. Don't kiss.

WHELAN, TOBACCO MAN, IN BIG NEW COMPANY

New York, March 29 (I.N.S.).—George J. Whelan and associates have obtained a charter for the recently organized United Tobacco Company, and are making preparations for an extension of the business of the company, it was learned today. The new company will operate under a Maryland charter, with $50,000,000 preferred stock. It is understood the new company will have no direct connection with the so-called Whelan tobacco stores, including the United Cigar Stores.

STOREKEEPER FINED FOR SELLING BAD EGGS

Bad eggs cost Samuel Swartz $200 today in East Boston. Swartz, who lives at No. 71 Franklin street, Revere, and who runs a store at No. 83 Porter street, East Boston, was charged with selling the eggs. He was fined $50 on each of four counts. He appealed.

HOW HIS TROOPS RAIDED WASHINGTON ORCHARD

How General Washington's soldiers raided his New York orchards, is revealed in an orderly book of 1771, which is part of the collection of the late William Green Spillabar of Boston. The collection is to be sold at the American Art Galleries, New York.

The book also contains General Washington's orders against profanity, for which he took his men to task.

The raid on General Washington's orchard provoked the order that any soldier caught in his orchard would be severely punished.

Profanity, it appears, became widespread in the ranks of the American army at the time and General Washington condemned it in no uncertain tones.

He wrote that a cursing man can have little hope of the blessing of heaven and that profanity is a vice so low that every man of sense detests it.

LONE WOLF NOT SUCCESS AS AUTHOR

Suffering, always suffering—and sacrificing, and being sacrificed, too—are the world's literary men and today James Walters, alias Frank Stevens, the "Lone Wolf," became a literary martyr under the cognomen of "One Yarn Walters."

The "Lone Wolf" is serving a life sentence at the State prison, which gives him plenty of opportunity to write.

Today it came out, however, that his only publisher has turned his work back on him after one lone story, and that Walters, who is registered on Warden Hendry's club roster as Stevens, is engaged in the prosaic task of making underwear, instead of putting words together.

STARTS FINGER-PRINT WAR.

It all came about because the "Lone Wolf," under the pen name "Rex," wrote a very entertaining and instructive article on finger-prints and the best methods of avoiding detection by the whorls and loops.

Walters is well versed in the dangers of finger-prints, having been tracked down through a print he left on a ginger ail bottle while calling informally on a Back Bay girl.

The article, printed in the Mentor, prisoners' publication at Charlestown, started a controversy between Registrar of Motor Vehicles Frank A. Goodwin and Commissioner of Corrections Sanford Bates.

Goodwin heatedly assailed an article that would give instructions on avoiding detection to criminals and potential criminals, while Bates declared the article contained nothing the criminal did not know and students in crime could not learn in ten easy lessons, or less.

THE UNDERWEAR SHOP.

But, although the "Lone Wolf" has submitted many articles to the Mentor since then, none of his other endeavors has been printed.

Also, it was discovered today that he has been transferred out of the Mentor office, where he was employed, and has been put to work in the underwear shop.

When Walters arrived at the prison to begin his life sentence he asked to be taught printing trades, and he was placed at work setting type. Here he remained until a few days after the controversy caused by his article.

Now the "Lone Wolf," because his only publisher has stopped publishing his "stuff" after one story, is known at the prison as "One Yarn Walters."

Literary men are always suffering!

WEALTH WIDOW, 78 YEARS OLD, ELOPES

Pawtucket, R. I., March 29.—The elopement and consequent marriage of Mrs. Annie R. J. Olney, 78-year-old widow of the late coal and lumber king, Samuel Olney, and Lucius Newel, 54-year-old business man, were confirmed when the couple returned to the bride's home at No. 13 Manchester street.

Recognized as one of the wealthiest women in the State, Mrs. Newell explained that the ceremony was performed in Philadelphia.

Five people were cut and bruised and three had a narrow escape when a sedan driven by Warren Scott of Holland street, West Somerville, collided with another machine and overturned at Seekonk, near Providence.

Miss Elizabeth Hazel of Hudson street, Somerville, and Miss Catherine La Rochelle of Tinkhalla street, Cambridge, in Scott's sedan, and Arthur A. Webster of Pawtucket, driver of the other car, and his wife were also injured.

DECLARES TEST WILL REVEAL CANCER

British Doctor Claims He Can Detect Disease in the Early Stages

Liverpool, Eng., March 29 (I.N.S.)—The claim that a means has been found for detecting the inception of cancer by a simple blood test is made by Dr. H. McCormick Mitchell, senior medical officer of the cancer hospital here.

Although English medical men are not convinced, he is enthusiastic, and declares his finding is "the dawn of a great discovery which will bring consolation and comfort to many suffering hearts."

"By means of a cleverly designed apparatus," Dr. Mitchell said in an interview, "the scientist can now examine a few drops of a patient's blood and detect cancer in its earlier stages in any part of the body.

"Further than this, by a similar blood test six months after an operation, the scientist is able to discover whether the operation has been successful in removing all traces of cancer. This method has been evolved after five years of research. The instrument used consists of means for measuring blood reactions spectroscopically."

HARVARD BOYS BUY FLIVVERS FOR ALMOST NOTHING

The "boneyard," where Harvard students buy and sell automobiles that long ago reached the invalid stage, is situated on Boylston street, Cambridge, near Harvard square. Quotations on decrepit cars are made after the stock exchange manner and many a specimen of antiquity, with nothing much more than four wheels and a seat and very shy on "innards," has been the subject of heated competitive bidding.

A choice flivver of pre-war vintage and looking much like a shell-buffeted relic of the front, was recently sold to Albert Treves for $9.90 by Ralph Denshaw. Denshaw was reported holding out strongly for $10, but finally gave in and knocked off the disputed. The "boneyard" market place came into existence because many Harvard men wish to get rid of their college chase-abouts.

8-DAY FEAST OF PASSOVER IS BEGUN

Jewish People Preserve the Memory of Release From Egypt

Tonight at sundown the solemn service of Passover, which marks the anniversary of Israel's redemption from Egyptian bondage, will begin throughout the universe.

Preparations for the eight-day holiday known as the "feast of the unleavened bread" have been going on for weeks in synagogues and Jewish homes universally.

Tonight is the most important of the holiday. It is then that the ritual known as the Haggadah is read to the family around the table. It is "Seder" night, the beautiful interpretation of the feast, with the stranger always welcome.

Passover is rich in symbols and ceremonies. The "Haggadah," a part of the Talmud, tells in elaborate fashion of the deliverance of the Jews by Moses. Prayers and songs taken from this book are read and sung by the "patriarch" during the home services, with all the others joining in.

The first and last two days of the feast are days of holy convocation, on which special services are held in the synagogues. Passover continues through Monday, April 5.

CIGARMAKERS EXPECT TO STRIKE

Local Union Is Only Awaiting Headquarters' Sanction of Wage Demands

Wednesday may see a general strike of the local Cigarmakers' Union 97, if the Chicago headquarters approves of the demand for increased wages.

Thomas F. Green, president of the local, said today that approval of the walkout is expected by the middle of the week, and that over 1,800 cigarworkers in and around Boston are ready to quit work.

The grievances of the union men are based on the reports of their wage committee that the manufacturers refuse to grant in wages any part of the revenue gained by the recent revenue reduction on cigars. Union officials desire only restoration of part of the wage cut made in 1922.

The committee argues that the manufacturers gain $4 per thousand by the revenue reduction. They demand about $2.31.

RIDICULES GUN TOTING OF TOURISTS IN WEST

Casper, Wyo., March 29 (A.P.)—"The Westerner no longer carries guns or revolvers, but the Easterner buys himself with an arsenal," Horace M. Albright, superintendent of the Yellowstone National Park, declared today before the State Public Utility Congress here, refuting the idea that the West is "wild and dangerous."

In the sealing of firearms of tourists by the Park authorities, to prevent crime or the killing of animals, Mr. Albright declared, "it is rare that a family from these mountain States has even one gun or pistol, but you ought to see the arsenal sometimes presented by a New York or Illinois or Pennsylvania automobile."

Requests to have names changed were filed in Middlesex Probate Court today.

Makary J. Boychenko of Malden wants his name changed to Makary Lazcas Boyden because, his petition said, his name is a sad affair in the mouths and memories of friends and associates.

DEMOCRATS TO MAKE TARGET OF COOLIDGE

Autocracy in Appointments to Be Featured in the Congressional Campaigns

Washington, March 29 (A.P.)—Presidential appointments, the Aluminum Company of America, in which Secretary Mellon is a stockholder; the Tariff Commission investigation and tax reduction will be emphasized in the Democratic campaign to gain control of Congress this Fall.

This was made clear in a statement issued today by Clem Shaver, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, who asserts that "the congressional campaign is approaching, with excellent outlook for gains that will mean Democratic control in both branches."

"The efforts of the President to intimidate and coerce members of boards and commissions by asking for written resignations or compelling commitments when he makes appointments is an astounding violation of the principles of free government," the chairman declared.

"The resolution to ascertain whether the Attorney-General had been expeditious in prosecuting an inquiry of the Aluminum Company of America—a resolution looking to the employment of special counsel—was defeated in the Senate, in keeping with administration policy, but the rising tide of popular indignation over the administration's tampering with the Tariff Commission led to adoption by the Senate of a resolution resulting in an investigation now under way.

"The wisdom of the Democrats of the Congress in forcing an annual tax reduction of at least $60,000,000 more than the administration would for a long time admit to be within reason is manifest.

Worcester, March 29.—Unconscious for five days, approximately 120 hours, as the result of an injury received in an accident, Marion T. Ladner, 13, of Brookline street, baffled medical authorities today. She is kept alive by forced feeding.

Miss Ladner received an injury to her head when the car in which she was riding collided with a trolley. While she is suffering from internal injuries, X-ray pictures show no fracture of the skull.

SEE SOLUTION OF KILLING OF TAYLOR

Results Expected to Follow Trip of District Attorney to the East

Los Angeles, March 29 (A.P.)—The next move in the William Desmond Taylor murder case was awaited today with the scheduled return from the East of District Attorney Asa Keyes and his assistant, Harold L. Davis. Taylor, a motion picture director, was found mysteriously slain four years ago.

Those friendly to the district attorney say that new information obtained by him during a 60-day visit to New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and other Eastern cities will result in an early solution of the mystery.

Baron Pitts, chief deputy district attorney, said last week that two entirely new witnesses have been questioned locally and that others, including Mabel Norman, film comedienne, and Mrs. Charlotte Selby, mother of Mary Miles Minter, former film actress, who were questioned during previous investigation, would be interviewed with the return of Keyes.

Others say that Keyes' trip will be looked into by the grand jury as a junket and that a "show down" will result to end once and for all the investigations that have repeatedly bobbed up since Taylor was found slain in his apartment.

Keyes, in a telegram to Pitts, has declared that one of his first acts on arriving in the city would be that of issuing a statement competely covering the status of the case, of set at rest numerous conflicting reports that have gained circulation regarding the progress of the investigation.

GALA PROGRAM FOR VETS IN HOSPITAL

Another wonderful entertainment is to be given at United States Veterans' Hospital, West Roxbury, next Thursday by the Boston Evening American.

This will be one of the regular bi-weekly goodwill offerings of this newspaper to the 870 ex-service men still battling there for health. And maybe the "boys" don't appreciate these shows!

Next Thursday's show will be put on by the DeVry Entertainment Service of No. 729 Boylston street, Boston, through its capable and genial manager, Bert A. Spear. Bert put on such a fine entertainment for the "boys" a few weeks ago, under the auspices of the Boston American, that, like "Oliver Twist," they called for more! and, as Bert's heart is all gold, he agreed to give them another show.

Several widely known vaudeville headliners will be on Thursday's bill. They include Miss Ruth Brewer, "the versatile musical maid," who plays, among other instruments, a banjo, saxophone, trombone, clarinet, flexotone and baritone. Her mother, Mrs. Eleanor Brewer, will be accompanist.

Another who will appear is Pietro Mordella, a piano-accordianist, who is without a peer. His numbers will range from opera to jazz.

Peter Murray, a dialect comedian and humorist, who is considered one of the best Scotch dialect artists in the country, also will be there to help the ex-service men forget their troubles.

Mr. Spear is arranging the remainder of the bill and promises nothing but the best. "The boys" of there deserve nothing but the best" said Bert, commenting on the program.

Shopping with Priscilla Price

DEAREST ANNE:

This past week we have had every variety of weather. The shops—though, they are Spring itself—I have never seen more beautiful clothes, accessories and flowers. Certainly we should all blossom forth in flower-like array on Easter Morn.

For the Sports of Spring

Had a pleasant time shopping today. Perhaps the atmosphere of a shop you are in has something to do about it—at least that is the feeling I had when I called at Wright & Ditson's, 344 Washington St.

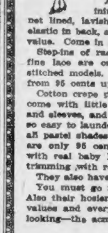
What a relief it was to find the right things for sport wear in their wonderful women's shop on the second floor! For instance, they had a two-piece dress, which one could use for golf or tennis and it is so different from the ordinary so-called sport things. Am sure it would be practical for general use—I'll try and describe it, but you really ought to see it yourself. It is made of a fine, soft, closely-knitted fabric, top part is pull-over style, has pocket on lower right side and the neck is round and nicely fitted. Skirt has two plaits in front stitched down to 12 inches from bottom. The colors are rose, lanvin green, copen, myrtle and white. Now, the interesting surprise—it is only $15.50!

Another model I saw of the two-piece style made of the same material. It has a pull-over top with the newest effect in string tie collar of self material. Skirt has two knife plaits on left side, front stitched half way down giving straight line effect yet ample fullness for ease of stride. Comes in rose, lanvin green, copen, myrtle and white, at the remarkably low price of $17.50!

Do go to Wright & Ditson's and see these little frocks. They are chic, low priced, practical and the latest thing.

Slim, Silken and Stylish

—is the girl who goes to Thresher Bros., 18 Temple Place, for her Easter underwear. You know they have opened an enlarged section for these dainty underthings. There is many a slip—but few as good as those I found in this shop. Their regular $4.45 all silk radium slip for Easter week only is $3.95 in all the Spring shades. Made with hip-hem and hemstitched top. Splendid value. Lovely crepe de chine ones have scalloped bottom and extra hip flounce also scalloped to make it shadow proof. Come in every silvery silver and cloth with flare bottom and French flower is $6.50. Good and short for the new flare dresses.



Adorable bandeaux of feminine tinted crepe de chine are neat lined, lavishly trimmed with lace, with elastic in back, and only $1.25. Awfully good value. Come in sizes 32-38.

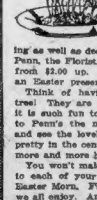
Step-ins of radium prettily trimmed with fine lace are only $2.85. Also plain hemstitched models. Others of silk muslin come from 95 cents up. Very dainty. All colors.

Cotton crepe pajamas are $1.45 a pair and come with little ruffle all around the neck and sleeves, and are very sweet looking and so easy to launder. Thresher's have them in all pastel shades. Cotton crepe night gowns are only 98 cents. Well cut and trimmed with real baby Irish picot edging or a flat trimming with rosebuds.

They also have a full line of pongee undies. You must go in and see this department. Also their hosiery—they have unprecedented values and everything is so new and fresh looking—the acme of Spring and Easter.

Redwood Burls for Easter

Awfully attractive are the Redwood burls at Penn's, the Florist's, 124 Tremont Street. These are most unique and come from the California redwood trees. They are cut from near the root of the giant sequoias, the oldest and largest living trees in the world. One of these burls, which are just starting, put in a shallow dish of water, sprouts forth and in a few weeks' time is covered with a luxurious fern-like growth. They last for years and make an awfully interesting as well as decorative plant for the house. Penn, the Florist, has them in different sizes from $2.00 up. Wouldn't you love one as an Easter present?



Think of having part of a 2000-year-old tree! They are really most fascinating and it is such fun to watch them grow. Do go to Penn's the next time you are in town and see the lovely burls. One looks awfully pretty in the center of the table and becomes more and more beautiful as time goes on.

You won't make a mistake if you give one to each of your friends this coming happy Easter Morn. Flowers—and growing flowers we all enjoy. And as they are the symbol of joy and happiness, we must have them at Easter tide.

Easter Chiffon at $1.00

—You just must go into Talbot's, 396 Washington St., and see their "Holeproof" chiffon hosiery at $1.00. They are marvelous and it is very rarely that you can get a clear, sheer chiffon "Holeproof" stocking for so little. For Easter week they have a large supply at $1.00 a pair or 3 for $2.85. It is a very special stocking of very thread silk chiffon with mercerized lisle heel, toe and top.

Talbot has them in all sizes and all the best colors, including gunmetal, grain, nonveau beige, atmosphere, daybreak, moonlight, shadow champagne, French nude, blush, mauve or taupe sandalwood and piping rock, as well as black.

Mail and telephone orders are given careful attention. Be sure and put yours in early.

Mrs. Myron Maibrun, one of our best dressed society women, pauses for a moment to have her picture snapped.

Have you noticed how each week Talbot has a special type of stocking on sale? This is one of the best. I know you will like them and want to get well stocked for the coming season. The demand has been so extraordinary they decided to repeat these hose for another week. Included in this sale is their anti-ravel pure silk stocking with lisle heel, toe and top for $1. They are awfully good, too.

Silk socks for men Talbot has for 65 cents a pair or 3 pair for $1.85. They are splendid quality and come in all the newest shades and really a remarkably good sock. They have lisle felt tops and ex-toe. The latter makes them wear ever so much longer and you know these are "Holeproof," too.

Tell your friends about these two hosiery items at Talbot's; they are certainly special values to be worn in the Easter parade.

Soft as a Sea Gull

is the imported face powder sold at the Touraine Glove Company, corner Winter and Washington Sts. It is made by one of the best known firms in all of Russia before the Revolution and is now established in Liege, Belgium. The finest rice powder, most delicately tinted and perfumed is only 50 cents a box with genuine lamb's wool puff. Comes in blanche, rachelle and naturelle to suit all complexions. It has a marvelous clinging quality and is beautifully fine and soft, giving the finishing touch to the fairest. The box itself is pretty, too. It is triangular with dainty sea gulls sailing over a bluish sea and makes a charming accessory to any dressing table.

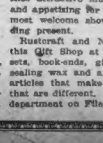
The Touraine Glove Co. have also a lovely cold cream soap. It is made by the same firm and will you believe it—only 25 cents a good size cake! Most imported cold cream soaps are 75 cents—but not this which is the used and treasured of beautiful Russian women of the aristocracy. Makes the face soft, smooth and velvety, and is a great help to complexions roughened by March winds. "Velouderma" for the hands and face I told you about a few weeks ago is made by this same concern and only 25 cents a tube. Everyone who has tried it won't be without it now.

Filene's New Gift Shop

has just been opened on their street floor, at the left of their main elevators, and, my dear, it is so nice to find a place where one can get Easter gifts, engagement and wedding presents and bridge prizes at the minimum of effort.

Easter cards are there too—from 5 cents up. The most adorable little ladies with lovely ostrich plumes in their Easter bonnets, darling rabbits and ducks—all sorts and types, just the kinds assembled together that it generally takes a long time to find.

Paul Revere, Cowan and Italian pottery, lovely pieces, range in price from 50 cents to $10.00. Their Mexican glass is awfully new. It is hand formed and breath blown and has a primitive quaintness and irregularity of its own. I know you will like it. Comes in most beautiful bottle green. Fascinating plates are only $1.00 each, and tumblers to match are 50 cents. Also attractive mugs and pitchers. So cool and appetizing for hot Summer days! Makes most welcome shower, engagement or wedding present.



To wish you A HAPPY EASTER

Rustcraft and Norwood novelties are in this Gift Shop at Filene's, too. Also desk sets, book-ends, gift stationery wrappings, sealing wax and a thousand and one other articles that make splendid gifts and gifts that are different. Be sure and see this new department on Filene's street floor.

Easter Sale of Shirts

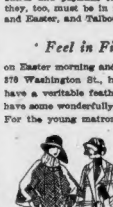
I just heard that the Talbot Co., 396 Washington St., is having a most marvelous sale of shirts for Easter. This is a chance for the women; and, you know, it is becoming more and more the privilege and custom for women to buy their husband's, brother's or son's shirts and there is no place like Talbot's to get the best. Every man and woman should take advantage of this sale this week. Talbot is able to offer lower prices and greater values than other places on account of their reputation and tremendous output, quick turnover and great buying power.

Think of a Broadcloth shirt in plain or fancy effect at $1.65 or 3 for $4.50! These are regular $2.50 values, and come in plain colors, lots of whitee, too, or in lustrous stripes with collar attached or collar band. They are really splendid. Also Broadcloth shirts at $1.85 and better quality which regularly sell for $2.50 for $2.65. These are the best looking shirts I have seen in ages, and just the kind you would want your husband to wear on Easter morning.

Pajamas are no longer expensive if you get them this week at Talbot's. Only $1.39 or 3 for $3.75. These generally sell for $1.65. They also have regular $2.50 pajamas in finer quality Broadcloth for $1.89, 3 for $5.50. And for the man who prefers stripes are Broadcloth ones at $2.35, 3 for $6.75, regularly $3.00 each. Don't miss this Easter special sale of shirts and pajamas for the man; remember, they, too, must be in fine feather for Spring and Easter, and Talbot's is the way.

Feel in Fine Feather

on Easter morning and wear one of Griffin's, 370 Washington St., hats and then you will have a veritable feather in your cap! They have some wonderfully chic Easter chapeaux. For the young matron are beautiful feather motifs on soft becoming straw models. Very Springy looking and so new, too, that you would love them. They are so good-looking and just the thing to wear with one of the new cape coats, which Griffin's also sell.



Their models are fascinating, lovely and soft, beautifully tailored and made in the manner for which Griffin is famous. Not expensive, either.

Plain tailored tweed coats cut on the new lines with well-fitted raglan sleeves are only $35. Full satin or crepe de chine lined. Others in plaids with harmonizing kasha cuffs, fronts and revere are $25. Stunning for sport and street wear.

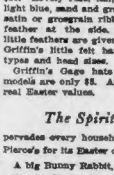
English style sport felt hats are very stylish and may be had at Griffin's for only $10. Lovely rose, tan, peach, green, dark or light blue, and gray trimmed with heavy satin or grosgrain ribbon and a sporty little feather at the side. By the way, these little feathers are given away free with all of Griffin's little felt hats. Styles to suit all types and head sizes.

Griffin's Gage hats in little sport mAan models are only $8. Another one of Griffin's real Easter values.

The Spirit of Easter

pervades every household that goes to S. S. Pierce's for its Easter cheer.

A big Bunny Rabbit, a yellow chicken with a lovely Easter bonnet or a stylish duck sporting a silk hat makes a wonderful pie for the centre of the Easter party table. $1.00 a string. Delights the heart of young and old at the Easter night's supper.



S. S. Pierce has every conceivable type of candy appropriate for this season. Chocolate eggs, rabbits and ducks, colored creamy eggs which are nice for the egg hunt on Monday. A big fancy egg filled with S. S. Pierce's best assorted chocolates makes a lovely Easter gift. Only $1.50, tied with Easter ribbon.

Another little gift is a box containing 8 individual jars of jams and jelly with 2 bars of nut chocolate and 2 of plain. It is in a violet box with lavender and yellow silk wool packing. Very attractive. Price $2.00.

The boy or girl at school deserves an Easter box from S. S. Pierce's. Containing all sorts of delicacies and sweets, $5.25, larger one $10.50.

Fascinating Easter gift centre-piece baskets make beautiful presents and are very tempting ly arranged.

For Easter breakfast or dinner it is the custom to serve ham—and S. S. Pierce's Red Label hams are delicious. Serve it with Beach plum jelly, which is 45 cents a large tumbler.

Anything and everything one wants for Easter may be found at S. S. Pierce's Copley Square, Tremont and Beacon Sts. or Coolidge Corner stores.

Next week I'll tell you all about Boston on Easter morning, and as every day there are more and more attractively dressed women in town I will be able to give you a complete outline of fashion-as portrayed by the Hub.

Until then, dear Anne,

Affectionately,

Priscilla

BETTY ALDEN'S COMMENT ON SOCIETY

Viscountess Astor Entertains in London Home as British Capital's Season Waxes Gay

ALTHOUGH THE SEASON wanes in the southernmost point of these United States—the "American Riviera" so called—and social magnates, sportsmen and sportswomen, and the ever-present tourist are turning northward with the robins, in London the season waxes gay.

NATURALLY, AMERICANS are vastly interested in the career of that volatile one-time Virginian, a fair, blonde and dynamic personage, Viscountess Astor, whose Nancy Langhorne days merged into early marriage with a Bostonian, one Robert Gould Shaw, 2nd.

THE VISCOUNTESS entertained brilliantly not so long ago at the Astor townhouse, No. 4 St. James Square, London, in honor of her former compatriots, the American Rhodes scholars now in England studying in Oxford's hallowed halls.

A DINNER, followed by a dance was the Astor program, with the slenderly girlish hostess supremely distinctive in pale blue velvet with ropes of pearls as ornaments and a bandeau of the softly gleaming things in her hair.

AMONG OTHER numerous dinners given by other hostesses, preceding the dance, Mrs. Frederick Sterling entertained for Mrs. Houghton and Miss Houghton, wife and daughter of the American Ambassador to the Court of St. James.

MRS. HOUGHTON'S contribution to feminine sartorial display was a magnificently done costume of emerald velvet, and Miss Houghton was in white, set off with tinkling gilt bead fringes.

WELL KNOWN Bostonians of the Ambassadorial circle were dinner and dance guests in the persons of the handsome Mrs. Boylston Adams Beal and her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Boylston Beal.

ALWAYS BEAUTIFULLY turned out, Mrs. and Miss Beal were as decorative as could be in the medley of handsome women and distinguished men. Mrs. Beal was wearing a cloth of gold with diamond ornaments and Miss Betty Beal chose a brilliant blue velvet of the Capri tint.

THE PALFREY SISTERS, MISSES POLLY, LEE, MIANNE and Sarah, experts at wielding the tennis racquet. Mianne and Sarah appear this week at the indoor matches at Chestnut Hill, seeking the national indoor title.

THE BEALS, who always spend a portion of each year in the British capital, where Mr. Beal is a member of the Embassy staff, will be back on this side in the early Summer, going directly to their Manchester place and their choice circle thereabouts.

PALM BEACH'S Old Guard, that smart residential set with picturesque villas set in tropical garden reaches, lingers on still, loathe to turn Northward to late Winter's brisk days.

WHILE EARLY season rush and brilliancy have passed, informal entertaining of the more intimate order is daily and nightly a Palm Beach feature. The beautiful Mrs. Leonard D. Ahl was hostess at dinner not long ago in the Everglades Orange Garden.

IT WAS A beautifully appointed small hospitality, the hostess extremely smart in iris with silver, on an evening of starshine and tropical night warmth beneath a glimmering moon, a vagrant breeze coming in from Lake Worth.

LOCAL NAMES prominent in Southland social paragraphs are those of Mrs. Charles F. Choate, Jr., Mrs. Charles Lewis Harding, Mrs. Hobart Endicott Warren, Mrs. Edgar R. Champlin and Mrs. Walter J. Mitchell.

MESDAMES CHAMPLIN, Warren and George Dobyn were guests at Mrs. James H. Kennedy's buffet luncheon, an al fresco festivity at the Kennedy South Orange Boulevard estate, a Palm Beach show place, by the way.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS, with sponsorship most impressive and just completing a successful year, is making future plans. The magnificent Hotel Alba, named in honor of the Duc d'Alba of Spain, is to house Art Society meetings for another season.

EDWARD T. STOTESBURY, dean of the Palm Beach colony, president of the Arts Society, is, with his colleagues, receiving countless felicitations on the Society's splendid concert program of the Winter.

THE HOBART ENDICOTT WARRENS, Frank Gair Macomber and Mrs. Charles Harding figure largely in Art Society membership. Both Mrs. Harding and Mrs. Charles Choate (of Boston affiliations), add materially to Palm Beach's reputation for smart and becoming feminine array.

MRS. CHOATE, on the Boardwalk and at the Beach Club, frequently wears her favorite tint, a lavender merging into mauve. One distinctive day frock was of lavender with white accessories, worn with a gorgeously figured organdie parasol.

SPEAKING of the Hotel Alba, that several million-dollar structure of individual beauty and admirable cuisine) and the Society of Arts, the Marquesa de Villa Viega of Spain, recent guest at the Alba, is bearing back to her Majesty, Queen Victoria Eugenia of Spain, that priceless collection of shawls and combs recently sent over here.

THE FORMER Ambassador to Spain, Alexander P. Moore, was the intermediary and good angel, securing from the Queen marvellous shawls and combs to be exhibited in Palm Beach under Art Society direction.

THEY WERE also shown at the Bright Shawl Ball, at the Hotel Alba, its inspiration, really, with feminine Palm Beach society appearing thereat in the swaying silks, intriguing mantillas and bright shawls of Old Castile to make a perfect tropical picture.

AT 93 FIGHTS CHARGES 45 YEARS OLD

Doctor Says Sheriff, 91, "Thinks He Is Doing His Duty"

Asbury Park, N. J., March 29 (A.P.)— Dr. Edwin P. T. R. Osbaldeston, ninety-three-year-old physician and Crimean war veteran, today was determined to fight forty-five-year-old charges that he is a horse thief and escaped prisoner. His ninety-one-year-old accuser, Deputy Sheriff S. Foster Black of Binghamton, N. Y., was equally determined to see justice served "as a warning to other people."

"I don't care if he is ninety-three years old," says Black, "and I don't particularly care what sentence he may get if he is convicted."

"It's all nonsense, absolute nonsense, but I have no grudge against the old man," says Dr. Osbaldiston, who is still remarkably spry.

"He means well. He thinks he is doing his duty. He gave me an uncomfortable night in that cold jail with no blanket and one drunk and two suspicious characters for companions. But I have no ill will against him."

Dr. Osbaldeston spent one night in the local lockup after Black had appeared here with the musty warrant dug out of Broome county files. The memory of the prisoner who escaped when he was on duty rankled in the deputy sheriff's mind more than forty years, and when he saw a newspaper picture recently of Dr. Osbaldeston he acted quickly.

"I am absolutely sure that I have my man," he says.

Asbury Park has rallied solidly to the doctor's cause. Mayor C. E. F. Hetrick and prominent citizens were prepared to urge Governor Moore to refuse extradition papers.

POSTOFFICE ACTS TO BLOCK PUBLISHERS

Washington, March 29 (A.P.).—The Post-office Department has asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to decline to give the American Newspaper Publishers' Association the right to intervene in proceedings instituted by railroads for increased mail transportation rates. To grant the publishers' petition, the department said, would be to divest the Postmaster-General of the discretion conferred upon him by law.

The publishers have asserted that rates for handling newspapers should be considered by Congress.

Martha Lee's Talks to Housewives

COOLING UNIT FOR ICE BOX SAVES MONEY

Just about now the careful housewife realizes that it's getting too warm to safely get along without ice. And a goodly number who are faithful budgeters are probably undecided whether they are going to squeeze the necessary 75 cents or $1 a week out of the "operating" allotment, and have nothing but a bunch of receipts to show at the end of the season for this expenditure or take a small amount each week from the "development" money, and make an investment in comfort and convenience—an electric refrigerator.

None of us want to be too hard on the ice man—many an extra mile he's travelled to bring the ice needed for the baby's milk when we have forgotten to put out the card—but we can't deny that—to put it mildly—the ice man is a mixed blessing. Firstly, his comings are so uncertain. How many trains we've lost, not daring to go until the house was safely locked up after his visit. And oh, the wear and tear of his muddy trail on a naturally good disposition! And the mopping we've done from the flying bits he chisels off to make the big block fit the chest—bits that we've paid for in cold cash, too!

There's no denying that it is pleasant to look at the other side of the picture and think of the comfort and convenience of economical electrical refrigeration. A complete cooling unit can be so quickly installed in the ice compartment of your present ice chest.

If you're even a teeny bit interested, why not let me send some of them along to you? You wouldn't mind a bit having the ice question solved for you this Summer, would you, if it could be done for little or no more than you'd be watching the money melt away?

WANT TO BAKE A CAKE? JUST FOLLOW THESE SIMPLE INSTRUCTIONS

I CREAM A CUP OF SUGAR WITH ½ CUP OF BUTTER
NEXT I SIFT 3 LEVEL TEA SPOONS OF BAKING POWDER WITH 2 CUPS CAKE FLOUR
THEN I BEAT THE WHITES OF THESE THREE EGGS
I ADD THIS MILK AND FLAVORING TO THE BUTTER AND SUGAR
AFTER ADDING THE EGG WHITES I POUR INTO A GREASED TUBE PAN.
AFTER BAKING 35 MINUTES IN A MODERATE OVEN MY CAKE IS DONE

WHEN you are told that a substitute is the same as Kraft Cheese, they refer only to the price.

KRAFT CHEESE

SECOND LESSON IN ART OF COOKING

In the recipe in today's series of pictures, I have featured the foundation of all butter cakes. If you'll follow my directions closely, this recipe will give you as fine a cake as you could wish to eat. From it you can make marble cake (by adding chocolate and spice to half the mixture); nut cake by baking in layers and sprinkling each layer with nut meats and granulated sugar; jelly cake by baking in two layers with a jelly filling; chocolate cake baked in two layers with chocolate frosting; Lady Baltimore cake in two layers with Lady Baltimore filling and a boiled icing; caramel cake in layers with caramel icing between and on top.

Use a measuring cup and after the flour is sifted, level off the cup with a spatula. Have your pan all buttered and floured and your ingredients measured before beginning to mix the cake. Don't stir your cake after you've folded in the egg whites.

Divide the baking time into quarters. During the first and last quarter you can move your cake gently if necessary but in the second and third quarters the cell walls are not firm and a jar will cause them to settle and make a heavy cake.

If your oven is too slow or you do not cream your butter and sugar sufficiently your cake will be coarse grained. It will be heavy and solid if too much flour is used and is also apt to crack open on top. Forewarned is forearmed against these most frequent causes of cake failure.

PLAIN WHITE CAKE.

One-half cup butter or substitute, 2 egg whites, 1 cup sugar (fine granulated), 2-3 cup milk, 2 cups cake flour, 1 tsp. flavoring, 3 level tsps. baking powder.

Work the shortening with slotted wooden spoon until it looks like cream around the edges. Then gradually add sugar to the shortening. Stir until fine and smooth. Next sift the flour, measure it, add the baking powder and sift three times. Beat the egg whites with wire whip until light and fluffy (a wheel beater will make them too dry). Add 2-3 cup of milk to the butter and sugar, alternately with the flour mixture. Beat the batter until very smooth. Then add the flavoring and beat well. Last of all fold in the egg whites, using the wooden spoon. Be careful not to break the air cells. Pour into a well greased and floured pan, and bake in a moderate oven (350 to 375 F.) for 35 minutes. This makes a wonderfully fine grained, moist, tender cake.

NEW COLLECTION OF CHEESE RECIPES

I have a brand new collection of unusual cheese recipes that make up one of the most valuable cook books I've seen in nah ya day. It contains recipes for meat substitutes—hearty dishes that contain even more protein than fish, flesh or fowl eat half the expense!—balanced menus, new salads and sandwich fillings, luscious pastries and desserts. I fought, bled and almost died annexing a generous supply of these books to pass along to you. They are expensive things to publish, being illustrated in natural colors, but I begged my prettiest for them, claiming that the readers of this page are among the most progressive, up-to-date housewives in New England—just the women, that can use a book like this to the best advantage. I won out—and the books are waiting here in the office for your request. No charge, of course.

TO MAKE FURNITURE POLISHING CLOTH

Pour 2 tbsps. of your favorite furniture polish into a glass jar and then pour it out again. In the empty jar place a square of velveteen or chamois. Leave it in the jar a day or two before using. Then use daily as polishing cloth. You'd be surprised how this small amount of polish penetrates the fabric.

Subjects like an ideal park are dear to the hearts of all Municipal League workres. Many booths are planned.

'GOOD LUCK,' G. B. SHAW'S ANSWER TO ACCUSER

London, March 29 (I.N.S.).—George Bernard Shaw is entirely undisturbed by the attacks which have been made against him in New York by Gilbert Frankau, British novelist, who charges that Shaw and H. G. Wells have misinterpreted British affairs for the American people.

"As no one will believe Mr. Frankau or what he says. I wish him the best of luck—hope it brings him a lot of money," said Shaw today. "His alleraitons are not worth considering. I am only amused. I won't tour America to correct the stories he spreads."

BOY THUG DIES BY STOLEN GUN

Cleveland, March 29 (I.N.S.).—An alleged eleven-year-old burglar killed himself today when a gun said by police to have been stolen was accidentally discharged as he was sneaking home over a back fence.

The boy was Steve Mogordy. He died almost instantly when the bullet from a revolver, identified as part of the loot taken from a confectionery store, crashed into his eye.

Police arrested Steve's brother, Andy, aged twenty, who is said to have confessed he and Steve robbed the store.

HOLD 11 BOYS IN 16 THEFTS

Lowell, March 29.—A baffling series of 16 breaks, extending over a period of a month and a half, was believed solved today when police rounded up 11 boys, members of three gangs. Two of the boys were arraigned privately before Judge Thomas J. Enright and released for appearance Friday in Juvenile Court.

Three schools were entered, chickens were stolen and a stereopticon was taken from the Coburn Mission in Varnum avenue. Lead pipe was taken from camps at Lakeview. The arrest of several men believed to have received the stolen goods is expected.

3000 CHEER FOR SOVIETS IN N. Y.

New York, March 29.—The red flag and Sovietism were vociferously cheered today at a meeting in Manhattan Opera House attended by 3,000 persons of whom a majority were seemingly in favor of Communism.

The meeting had been called by the advocates of a radical magazine who had arranged a debate between Professor Scott Nearing, well known Radical, and J. Robert O'Brien, representative of the National Security League, on the wisdom of recognition of the Russion Soviet government by the United States.

Nearing spoke in favor of recognition and O'Brien against it. The remarks of the former were wildly cheered, just as those of O'Brien were wildly and tempestuously hissed.

American First When Big News Breaks

"Scoops" and "beats" on important news, exclusive stories and pictures, constantly form part of the service given its readers by the Boston Evening American. Following are some of the achievements in this field in the last fortnight:

Tuesday, March 16.—News of the arrest of Dominic Capiro, who was identified as the "stabber" who attacked Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall Tuckerman, was given first in the Boston Evening American, which scored a beat on other evening newspapers.

Wednesday, March 17.—The Boston Evening American again beat its rivals with news of the $25,000 Watertown fire, at which five firemen were overcome.

Friday, March 19.—Two more beats for the Boston Evening American in the first disclosure of the East Dedham murder and the suicide of Edward Radding, millionaire real estate operator, in his cell in Providence.

Saturday, March 20.—Boston Evening American readers exclusively were told of the arrest of the husband of the woman murdered in East Dedham, when he went to identify her body.

Wednesday, March 24.—Exclusive pictures were printed in the Boston Evening American of the "airplane christening" of a baby in West Roxbury.

Friday, March 26.—The only Boston paper to print a picture of Miss Esther "Polly" Paul, the Gloucester and Wellesley College girl whose escort was mysteriously shot in Chicago, was the Boston Evening American.

3 FALL INTO NET IN 'CON' GAME

Alertness of Patrolmen William Desmond and Herman Schultz of the Milk street station today thwarted three alleged "confidence" men and resulted in their arrest.

George H. Wilson of St. Botolph street, Robert Corrigan of Heckler street and Irving Cook of Commonwealth avenue were arrested on charges of conspiracy to steal from Herbert Butler of Dalton.

Butler, according to his story, met one of the men at South station, who posed as a stranger in town and suggested a walk. They then met the second man who talked of big deals in Florida real estate. The first stranger proposed to Butler that they "match" the second stranger.

While they were arguing over the ante, Patrolmen Desmond and Schultz, who were trailing them, stepped in, and at the same time another alleged member of trio walked into the net.

POLICEMAN HURT WHILE MAKING ARREST

In a scuffle with a man he was placing under arrest at the Ellis House at Lynn, Patrolman John L. Sheehan slipped on a tonic bottle and fell down a flight of stairs, sustaining severe bruises on the knee and leg.

The man arrested was Robert O. Courtney. He was booked on a charge of drunkenness.

Says "Goodbye Washboard"

New kind of soap makes her clothes whiter than she could rub them

I'M through with washday drudgery —No more hard washboard rubbing for me. No more red, rough hands. This new way soaks out the dirt gently in an hour or two in the morning or overnight, whichever is handier for me. It makes the clothes cleaner and whiter than ever before—in half the time.

And I don't even touch the washboard. I've said goodbye to it forever. Rinso does all the work for me. The loosened dirt floats away in the rinsing —leaving the clothes sweeter and whiter than I could rub them. And now I don't boil the clothes either, because Rinso soaking whitens the wash better than boiling—and sterilizes, too.

Since using Rinso I find that my clothes last much longer because there's no wear and tear rubbing against the board. Even the most soiled spots on hems, cuffs and collars—need just a gentle rub between the fingers to make them spotless. Many of my friends use Rinso in their washing machines. They say it's better than anything else—it gets the clothes so much cleaner. Ask your grocer today for

BROADCASTERS OPEN WAR ON COMPOSERS

Hearings Open Today in Washington on Radio Copyright Music

Washington, March 29 (I.N.S.).—Open warfare, brewing for months, was in full swing today between the National Association of Broadcasters and the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers.

Launching the public attack, Paul S. Clews, executive secretary of the broadcasters, charged the composers' association with a series of offenses, from monopolizing the best music of the country to taxing a number of broadcasting station out of existence.

He spoke from WEAF of New York and a hookup of stations which reach virtually the entire radio audience east of the Rocky Mountains.

Clews urged the listeners to write to their congressmen and senators to urge an amendment to the copyright laws to meet the demands of the broadcasters.

Hearings on use of copyright music over the radio will start before the Senate committee on Patents, headed by Senator Butler, Republican, of Massachusetts, April 5. A bill on this subject already has been introduced by Senator Dill, Democrat, of Washington.

"Unless the law is revised, the high-class programs of music over the radio will be seriously curtailed," Clews declared.

"The radio broadcasters desire to pay an adequate compensation for the use of copyright music.

"We wish to pay all copyright owners, not just the American society.

"Two stations already have been forced to close because of the high prices demanded for use of the music which the public desires.

"If the practice keeps up other important stations will close."

MORE MONEY FOR RADIO INSPECTION SERVICE

Allocations of funds amounting to $335,000 for radio supervision during the next fiscal year are practically assured the Department of Commerce by the passage of the current appropriation bills by the Houses and a favorable committee report in the Senate. This amount is $19,000 less than was allowed by the Budget, but is approximately $115,000 more than was provided for the current year. It will permit of better radio inspection and probably decrease interference, by providing increased personnel, testing equipment and three new radio test trucks.

New sub offices and more inspectors will probably be established at Dallas, Memphis, Portland, Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Denver, Omaha, St. Louis and Minneapolis.

Love Sufferings of a Beautiful Boston Girl Who Had Heartroom for One Man Only

READ THIS FIRST:

SYLVIA STARR, employed in the Boston Public Library, has been engaged to RANDALL PHELPS, Boston real estate man, for a year when he asks her to break their engagement. He explains with brutal frankness that he's fallen in love with her best friend, FAY SHIRLEY, a Beacon Hill flirt.

Heartbroken, Sylvia gives him up, greatly to the satisfaction of her AUNT AGNES ("Aunt Agony"), the shrewd old maid who reared her. Aunt Agony calls Ranny a lazy good-for-nothing, and predicts that he'll never be true to any woman. She encourages Sylvia to marry PETER WILK, of a good Boston family, who adores her.

But Sylvia cares only for Ranny. And when he and Fay suddenly break their engagement, Sylvia marries him after all! The two of them settle down in the Beacon street flat that Sylvia calls The Nest, and for a few weeks are happy. Then Ranny seems to fall under Fay's spell a second time, and on the nights when he's not playing poker, he's with her.

But when Sylvia tells him that they're going to have a baby, he turns over a new leaf and for months behaves like a model husband. Fay announces her engagement to one of her old beaus, EDDIE CARTER, State street wholesale merchant, and marries him.

During the period before the birth of the baby, Sylvia becomes great friends with MOTHER PHELPS and LOLLY, Ranny's sister, who has married the family chauffeur, THOMAS BOYLE. The two women, fond as they are of Ranny, make no secret of the fact that he has always been too fond of women, and that he isn't always truthful. But Sylvia defends him loyally.

Soon after the birth of RANNY JUNIOR, Ranny starts running around again—this time with young "PUSS" MARCH. He insists that he's entitled to friendships with other women, but when Sylvia finds Puss' picture in his watch, she knows that he's more than friendly with the girl. He gives Sylvia very little money to run the house on, and finally Sylvia starts giving music lessons in order to buy clothes for herself and the baby. Aunt Agony happens in one day and finds it out. She threatens to go to Ranny's father about it.

(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY)

CHAPTER XXIX

With one of her quick jerky movements Aunt Agony set the baby down on the floor among his little toys and got up to go.

"That's a nice baby" she said sourly, looking down at his small blond head, "but he looks entirely too much like his dad to suit me! As they say 'Like father, like son.' So I supposs he'll grow up to let his wife support him the way Ranny lets you support him!"

With that hot shot she marched stiffly into the bedroom to put on her wraps.

Sylvia followed her. With eyes that smouldered blue-black in her face, she watched her aunt set her pancake of a hat on the very top of her head and jab the hatpins through it. Aunt Agony was one of the few women left in the world who still wore hatpins and corsets.

"Look here, Aunt," Sylvia said to her. "Even YOU can't say things like that to me about Ranny and get away with it!"

Her voice was low and calm as the voice of any quiet person is when she is most excited. And Sylvia was not only excited now, but angry right down to the tips of her toes.

"It's nobody's business if I give music lessons," she went on, but Aunt Agony interrupted her with a snort.

Sylvia Wins Out

"Oh, isn't it!" she cried. "Well, then I'll just make it my business, and we'll see what Randall's father has to say about his beautiful son not giving you enough money to live on! We'll see!"

She started out of the room, but Sylvia barred her path with her arms stretched across the doorway. She was shaking from head

U. S. WILL FLOAT GERMAN BONDS

Washington, March 26 (I.N.S.)—The American and German governments have about concluded negotiations for a complete settlement of all outstanding World War claims, now held by the nationals of both countries, it was learned today.

The settlement was based upon an agreement by the American government to float a huge bond issue in this country to finance Germany in paying the claims of American nationals. At the same time the American government will release all German-owned property seized during the war, with the exception of $30,000,000 worth, which will be held as a guarantee of interest payments on the loan, and the great fleet of German merchant liners which were seized in American harbors at the outbreak of the war.

$46 TO REGISTER EACH CHICAGO VOTER

Chicago, March 29 (A.P.)—It cost approximately $46 for each Chicagoan placed on the poll books at the Tuesday registration.

The names of 218,217 voters were erased from the registration lists by the election commissioners, leaving a net gain of 8,121, with the registration cost placed at $282,000.

Election officials declared that a large proportion of the names stricken off merely were those of persons who had changed address since the previous registration and consequently were on more than one set of books.

BATTLING GALE AND SNOW

Nine in Party That is Trying to Reach Mountain's Peak

Pinkham Notch, N. H., March 29 (A.P.)—The first attempt ever made to scale Mount Washington by dog sled is under way today.

Somewhere up the snow drifted, wind-whipped sides of New England's highest peak, Arthur Walden, of Wonasta, Lancet, bronzed veteran of many a gruelling snow race, and his team of Eskimo huskies is toiling toward the summit.

With them are eight newspapermen and photographers. They started at 9 o'clock last night from the Glen House here. The old carriage road which leads from this place to crown of the mountain requires eight miles of tortuous ascent to cover the 6,293 feet of snow blanketed mass that is Mt. Washington in Winter time.

Through the clear moonlight of the night they fought against a gale that rushed down the sides of the peak, and into the clear brisk day that saw a temperature of less than 30 degrees below zero. The road was badly piled, in many places all trace had been obliterated, and the going was hard.

It was expected here that no attempt would be made to go beyond the Halfway House today, but that the party would rest to gather strength for the dash to the top which probably will come late tonight or tomorrow.

There was no means of communication with the house, however, and old timers here who know the hazards of Mr Washington predicted Walden would base his movements on weather excellency.

Walden is one of the better known of dog sled racers. He won the original international sled dog race over a course from Berlin, four years ago, and has competed in many other contests both before and since.

TWIN PUP 32 POUNDS HEAVIER THAN OTHER

Here's a pair of twins who do not look alike. They are the 4-month old puppies owned by Mrs. Margaret Barbeau of No. 36 Franklin street, East Somerville.

The youngsters are Midget, weighing 1 pound and 15 ounces, and her brother, Chubby, weighing 34 pounds. On their maternal side they are collies, while on their paternal branch they are airedales.

Midget is a ball of fluff and resembles the mother, while Chubby has a wealth of wiry hair.

Saved Dad's Hat

When George Lawless was driven from his home in Waverly, by fire, he heroically saved his father's best hat from the flames.

CANDY KID THUG IN NEW FIGHT FOR LIFE

New York, Mar. 29 (I.N.S.)—Rich and Reese Whittemore the "Candy Kid" thug chief, who volunteered to reveal the story of his criminal career so as to free his wife, "The Tiger Girl," was grilled again today about the hiding place of the $1,000,000 loot stolen by the "Night Club Bandits" in the last year.

Whittemore's story has led to the arrest of one man in Baltimore and caused a general hunt for others, but is unsatisfactory to District Attorney Banton, who threatened today that unless Whittemore volunteers more details "The Tiger Girl" will stay behind the bars.

Whittemore's confession last night marked fear of execution in Maryland for the murder of a prison guard and a consequent desire to avoid extradition to that State. He has also shown intense hatred for William Unkeback and Anthony Paladino "the squealers," and dare re to name Jacob and Leon Kramer and Milton "Shaffles" Goldberg.

It is on the shielding the Kraemers that today's questioning hinges Believing the Kraemers to be the "key" to the gang's horde of loot detectives say Whittemore hopes through them to avoid extradition and some day go free to enjoy the spoils of his criminal career.

UNDER EVIL INFLUENCE, HE SAYS

Noted Plastic Surgeon Forgives Woman Who Deserted Him

New York, March 29 (A.P.)—Dr. Louis P. Berne, noted plastic surgeon, whose wife, Mrs. Doris Berne, is under arrest in "an amazing tangle of love and larceny," says he will stand by her even though she deserted him over a year ago.

"I'll do everything I can for her," he says. "I forgive her everything she has ever done to me because she was under the influence of an evil man."

Mrs. Berne, her 21 year-old brother, Elliot Jaffe, and Paul Rosenthal, son of a shirt manufacturer, with whom she eloped in 1925, only to be deserted two months later are charged with defrauding Florida banks of $250,000 through bad checks. Florida detectives estimate that the amount may reach $1,000,000.

The trio were arrested yesterday as fugitives from justice on a warrant issued at Miami by Federal authorities. Dr. Berne, himself, and Herman Jaffe of Hoboken, Mrs. Berne's father, also ran afoul of the law when they were charged with smashing a photographer's camera after an attempt to take their pictures at police headquarters.

Rosenthal also faces a charge of violation of the Mann Act, growing out of his relations with Mrs. Berne, and Jaffe is charged with illegally possessing firearms as the result of the discovery of two pistols in his apartment.

RAPS STUBBORNNESS IN PASSAIC STRIKE

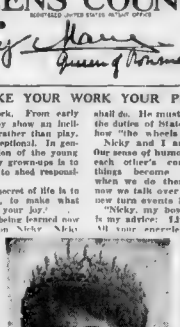
Passaic, N. J., March 29 (A.P.)—The tenth week of the strike of mill workers in the Passaic textile district began today with strikers and mill owners still deadlocked, and no settlement in sight.

The Passaic Chamber of Commerce issued another call to mill owners and strikers to compose their differences.

It said the insuperable difficulty "had been the refusal of the mill owners to treat with outsiders . . . the objection of the owners in Washington and the determination of the 'outsiders' to sanction no negotiations except those made by themselves."

Eight textile strikers, including nineteen-year-old Nancy Sandowsky who was at liberty on bail in a disorderly conduct charge, were arrested today when police dispersed a crowd of 300 attempting to picket the Passaic Print Works.

QUEEN'S COUNSEL



MAKE YOUR WORK YOUR PLAY

SOME love work. From early childhood they show an inclination to work rather than play. But they are exceptional. In general the inclination of the young and also of many grown-ups is to shirk work and to shed responsibilities.

Yet the great secret of life is to love your work, to make what you have to do your joy.

This lesson is being learned now by our second son, Nicky. Nicky is a cheerful fellow, loving fun sport and excitement of every sort. He is talented and eager but, like most young creatures he prefers skimming the surface of things, doing what he likes, not what he must.

We put him for a few years into the British Navy, that great healthy school for duty, tradition, loyal effort and service. It has taught him much, helped to make a man of him.

But now we have had to call him home. The son who was to have been his father's direct successor has forsaken the part of honor for it is thus that his parents and his country look upon his desertion), and so, although it is not his birth-son, Mihal, who is heir to the throne, our second boy, Nicolas, has now duties he never imagined would fall to his lot.

He must be prepared if the actual King should die before Mihal is of age, and so Nicky can no more pick and choose what he shall do. He must be initiated into the duties of State, he must learn how "the wheels go round."

Nicky and I are great friends. Our sense of humor fits. We enjoy each other's company and all things become easy, amusing, when we do them together. So now we talk over by the hour the new turn events have taken.

"Nicky, my boy," says I, "here is my advice: Life is before you. All your energies, your desires, hopes and talents are at your own disposal. Square your shoulders, look life and duty in the face. Mix well together your desires and your duties so that they fuse into one. Let desire be your duty, and joy be your work. It CAN be done. If you were a fool it could not. But you are not a fool and you have the right spirit. Start right off making what you have to do your joy. Instead of knowing only how to run a motor, learn to run the bigger, more essential, more lasting things.

"Say to yourself constantly, as you believe in time: 'I love my work, I love my work. My duty is pleasure, my duty is pleasure. You will be astonished how soon what was but a formula becomes a truth."

We can all put joy into what we have to do. I KNOW it. It is the real philosophy of life.

4 LINED UP AS FRENCH 'KING'

Duke of Orleans' Death Throws Pretensions to Guise's Family

Paris, March 29 (A.P.).—The death of the Duke of Orleans at Palermo caused consternation in the royalist ranks in France. The Duke always had postponed settling the question of who should be his successor, and with his almost sudden death the royalist party finds itself without plans.

The next in line of succession is the Duke of Guise, son of the Duke of Chartres. By many it is thought he will decide to forego claim to what is deemed the empty honor of the pretendership, either in favor of his young son, Prince Henry of Orleans, who is sixteen years old, or to the Duke of Vendome or the Duke of Nemours.

Up to the present the Duke has always kept out of politics, which gives weight to the belief that he will renounce his rights to the pretendership.

Louis Philippe, Duke of Orleans the great grandson of the late King of France, King Louis Philippe I died Sunday at his villa in Palermo Sicily, from pneumonia, at fifty seven.

He had had a spectacular career during his forty years of exile from France. He maintained the traditions of the Bourbons by living a colorful and pleasure-seeking life.

The son of the late Comte de Paris, he was soldier, Arctic explorer, traveler, author and botanist. He was a prince of spendthrifts and did away with several fortunes.

Louis Philippe married the Archduchess Maria Dorothea of Austria who obtained a divorce from him. The Duke shocked the French royalists because of an alleged attachment to a Parisian actress, and particularly when the actress wore the Bourbon family's jewels on the stage.

BAR 39 LAWYERS IN TAX CASES

Washington, Mar. 29 (I.N.S.)—Attempts to "fix" employes of the Bureau of Internal Revenue and influence the decision on tax cases involving millions of dollars, have resulted in the disbarment of a number of tax lawyers from practice before the Treasury.

Thirty-nine lawyers and probably more attorneys in connection with customs and other cases in which taxpayers are seeking to obtain refunds or otherwise adjudicate tax claims.

A California lawyer was convicted of receiving fees from clients without rendering any service, indicted under false pretense, passing worthless checks, defrauding hotels and being worthless on state

TEX RICKARD BOOMS TUNNEY FOR DEMPSEY BOUT

TITLE GO FOR YANK BALL PARK

Wills and Stribling Also Considered as Opponents for Light Heavy King

New York, March 29 (I.N.S.).—Reports of an important announcement, soon to be made in connection with Gene Tunney, heavyweight championship contender, were circulated today. It was said that an announcement would be made that Tunney had been matched with either Jack Dempsey or Harry Wills for a bout this summer, although one variation of the rumor had it that Tunney and Young Stribling would be the principals.

Stribling was on ... route to Atlanta ... [illegible] training for a series of bouts next month at Wichita, Kan., and Kansas City. Tunney is ... in town to undergo light training.

Rickard is believed to be concentrating his attention on the coming of a Dempsey-Tunney match.

New York March 29 The New York Daily Mirror in its feature ... [illegible] ... copyrighted ... [illegible] ... articles by Bret Keats, says a writer:

A heavyweight championship match between Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney is all set for the Yankee Stadium early in the Summer. Announcement of the big affair will come from Tex Rickard's office within the next ... [illegible] ... and publicly will be confirmed by the boxing commissioners at Tuesday's meeting of the board.

Rickard evidently has succeeded in overcoming the opposition of the boxing commissioners to the match. It is said the actions have been reduced to chance ... [illegible] ... toward the Dempsey-Tunney-Wills triangle on one important point.

Rickard has pointed out that it would be unjust to Dempsey to ask him to defend his title against the formidable ... [illegible] ... without allowing him to take part in one warmup bout after his three years of idleness.

This angle has had great weight with the solons. William Muldoon in particular, is strong for a Dempsey-Tunney bout before Gene is sent against the giant colored man. Muldoon, an expert on physical culture, takes the stand that it would be impossible for a fighter who has been out of the ring at long as Dempsey to do his best work without first taking part in one or more trial bouts.

Rickard and Dempsey are prepared to give assurances that Dempsey will go through with the Wills match before the summer is over. Paddy Mullins, manager of Wills, is to be silenced by ... ARLINGTON BOY MAKES GOOD WITH SOX

By JACK CONWAY

Gulfport, Miss., March 29.—Morris Gottlieb, Arlington Heights schoolboy, has won his spurs with the Red Sox. He will be the envy of every youngster in Greater Boston, this season as he has been appointed Red Sox bat boy by Manager Lee Fohl.

The youthful Mister Gottlieb pulled a brand new idea when he reported to Fohl at New Orleans for Spring training. He made the long trip from Boston by auto and freight. But he landed on the job with heads up, even though his limited bank roll was depleted.

Jack Conway

Bill Bierhalter, Sox physical adviser, took Gottlieb in charge. As the Red Sox prepared to break camp at New Orleans and start the march North Bierhalter called the gay-hearted Gottlieb aside. "Would you like to go back home?" queried Bierhalter.

Morris choked up, while the tears began to roll down his cheeks. Thoughts of home had brought a big lump into his throat and he couldn't speak.

"Well then," resumed Bierhalter "you've made the grade. Lee Fohl has told me to notify you that you will be the mascot this year. And the ball players have raised a fund to send you home de luxe. You will ride in Pullmans instead of on freights."

Hawaii Invites Panther 11 to Play Game

Pittsburgh, Pa., March 29 (A.P.).—The University of Pittsburgh has been asked to send its football team to Honolulu for a post-season game with the University of Hawaii on next New Year's Day. This was made known today in a special dispatch to the Gazette-Times from Honolulu.

The Hawaiian offer, the dispatch said, carries with it a guarantee of $10,000 and full expenses for twenty players and officials during their stay in Honolulu.

FIVE BOUTS AT CASINO A. C.

By RINGSIDE

North Shore has the call on the boxing fans of this section of the State tonight with a brilliant card at the Casino A. C. of Lynn, in Casino Hall, Shoe City. The usual excellent boxing card has been arranged by Matchmaker Jack Murphy with five bouts, three of eight-round lengths, and two of six rounds duration.

The match that is carded as the feature attraction will bring on Jeff Mason, the fighting "sailor lad," of the U. S. S. Florida, and Larry Bagnolia of Cambridge. Brignolia is one of the cleverest chaps that has stepped into the ring in recent days and his success is being watched closely by fistic followers.

Mason needs no introduction to the North Shore fight patrons who have stormed the doors on numerous occasions to get a peek at his milling and never-ceasing thunder of blows. Ray Cross of Milford and Billy Nelson of Brockton, along with Bobby Brown of Lowell and Joe Harnett of Halifax, N. S., will complete the eight-round performers.

In the first six rounder will be Jimmy Dixon of Newburyport and Johnny Troy of Boston, while the other will find Jimmy Ross, Boston, meeting Gene Clarke of Lawrence.

On Thursday night the big show of the week will come off under the direction of the Suffolk A. A. in Mechanics Building, with the New England champion heavyweight, Jack Sharkey, facing King Solomon of Panama, the great South American champion.

PREDICT BIG SEASON FOR HORSEMEN

By GUS DALY.

Worcester, Combination Park and the Readville two-minute track will not stage any threats this season, but the departure from racing circles of these three paces does not reflect on the enthusiasm or the future of the light harness sport. On the contrary, the interest shown, judging from the entries received on the Bay State and the Orange County circuits, is the greatest ever.

The sceen of action has in a sense been changed a bit, nevertheless, New England devotees of this wholesome and healthy outdoor sport will have the opportunity of seeing some of the best trotters and pacers which have ever shown their wares in these parts.

All of the stakes on the Bay State have filled in fine fashion. The same goes for all of the class races. The entries for the three-year-old trotting stakes apparently overshadow everything else.

The situation down in the Provinces and the Pine Tree State for some high class racing is better than ever. Our Canadian friends this season have plenty of high class material to draw from, for they were among the busiest buyers at last Winter's horse sales.

The Ribbon Cane pacer with Jackson Grattan, John R. Braden, Royal Grattan, Jennie H., Hedgewood Boy and several others almost as good are all engaged in the free-for-all pacing events.

Not all one ago $300 and $500 were high figures for them to shoot at, but in these trying days $1,000 is the minimum and $2,000 the maximum.

Billy Crozier the popular Hartford reinsman, will have a formable stable and will be seen to good advantage in any company that Richard, the five year old ... that ... and James P Berry $20,000 heads the list.

Six pacers, Sharkie, Reppet B, Phil O'Neill, Miss Carr Moko, Frank Manager and Alva Pointer are the pacers. Hollywood Frisco and Harris Axtell are the all-age trotters, two, three-year-olds and the same number of two-year-olds also complete the list.

SOLOMON IN FINE SHAPE FOR SHARKEY

On Thursday night the big show of the week will come off under the direction of the Suffolk A. A. in Mechanics Building, with the New England champion heavyweight, Jack Sharkey, facing King Solomon of Panama, the great South American champion.

This meeting of two of the cleverest heavyweights in the boxing business, Sharkey and Solomon ... is bound ... the ... is boasted by all aspiring heavyweight pugilists with a ... of opinion as to the merit and finish of both for a parade up the road to success in the class which has Jack Dempsey as King Tut.

Tunney and Sharkey were once upon a time matched to clash in a bout in New York. Between Tunney and Matchmaker McMahon, the contracts, etc., went for naught. Gene Tunney either ... for too much of the proceeds or he sidestepped Sharkey.

Sharkey is clever, but lacks ... aggressiveness. He is like Hoff, the world's famous pole vaulter. Sharkey has the happy faculty of just getting by with clever boxing and gaining enough points to win a bout.

A much-needed rest has done both battlers good. Thursday night they should be at their best. Solomon has been idle for two months, ... ing off a severe cold and spending most of his time in the South.

The New England champion has taken part in the same number of contests since the first of the year. He defeated Western Joe Lawson at Hartford in two rounds by swatting him to sleep and he easily whipped Eddie Huffman, the Pacific Coast heavyweight, in ten rounds at the Madison Square Garden. He has been training diligently ever since preparing for a bout with George Godfrey on the Coast which affair was cancelled when the promoters refused to come clean with a $6,000 guarantee. Then came his opportunity to meet Solomon and he just grabbed it without asking questions.

Woodsies to Play Bethlehem Eleven

Bethlehem Steel, Western champions in the National Cup, will visit this city Saturday, meeting the Woodsies in a league game that promises to be one of the best ... of the season. The steel workers had an easy time defeating New Bedford Saturday at home by a 4-to-1 score. Andy Stevens, the leading goal scorer of the league, was missing from the Whalers' lineup.

INSIDE GOLF

By CHESTER B. HORTON

Cultivate good golf form. Never cease to try to improve upon your form, however good it may be. Often you see a golfer who gets fine results with a golf form so bad the excellent results leaves you amazed, yet the man who plays golf that way operates on the narrowest margins. The least deviation from a task he has already made difficult as his shot will go bad. The player with good form increases the margin he has for safety.

Kirby Lands in Pugilistic Calcium Glare

Tommy Kirby of Roxbury today looms as the next big shot to be fired in the pugilistic warfare in the Hub. Manager Dan Carroll's heavyweight candidate was today named as a possible opponent for Young Stribling by Matchmaker Eddie Mack of the Commercial Club.

Announcement also was forthcoming that the new Arena A. A. wants Kirby to battle Jim Slattery of Buffalo.

Kirby, during the last couple of months, has forced his name out front with the contending parties for the light heavyweight title and has all the qualifications of a nifty battler.

Dondero Selects Best Hockey Players From Boston High Sextets

All-Scholastic Hockey Sextet

Alfred McGrath, centre.
Robert Denny, left wing.
Edward Mannix, defence.
James Bailey, right defence.
Burton Stratton, goal.

By EDDIE DONDERO.

The annual award of hockey honors to schoolboy players in the Hub circuit is made today by the Boston Evening American. Hyde Park, Boston Latin, Mechanic Arts, Brighton, Boston English and Trade School each contributed one player to this mythical selection of an All-Star sextet.

In making these selections the writer judged the player by their speed, brains, co-operation, good sportsmanship.

Naturally enough, there are a few individuals who will not meet with the approval of this or that player but one's opinion is his sole belonging.

Some will offer criticism through theories while others will hand it out from practical knowledge so the opinions will vary immensely.

Edward Mahoney, Alfred McGrath, Robert Denny, Edward Mannix, James Bailey and Burton Stratton compose the first team Honorable mentions are also given to the players who were beaten out for regular positions by narrow margins.

The captaincy of this mythical delegation belongs to Edward "Red" Mahoney of Hyde Park High, and a brief outline on how the players were picked and why, will no doubt prove that they are entitled to it.

OVERGROWN MIDGET.

Young Mister Mahoney shapes up like an overgrown midget and doesn't weigh 120 pounds soaking wet. Optimism is his middle name. He is the best stick handler in the league, winning individual scoring honors by caring 16 goals during the current season.

He has everything necessary to meet the requirements to hockey fame and intends to matriculate at Boston College after a short sojourn at some New England prep school. Alfred McGrath, from Boston Latin, an exceptional fast skater but handicapped throughout the season because he was forced to play on a poor team is chosen for the centre ice job. He is too fast for his mates who are unable to keep up with him. "Al" is the son of Hugh McGrath well known in New England sport realms. He will enter Dartmouth next Fall and no doubt become acquainted with a Big Green hockey uniform next year.

OUT OF HIS CLASS.

Robert Denny, the Mechanics Arts representative, clinches the other wing assignment. One of the main reasons the Artisians finished in second place is due largely to his outstanding performances.

Edward Mannix and James Bailey, coming from Brighton and English High respectively, complete our defense selections. Mannix, weighing about 175 pounds, used his body to perfection, stopping his opponents. Nobody ever breezes by him and he is a dead shot at the cage.

Bailey is originally a wing man, but through lack of capable defensemen with ability, we moved him back in front of the goalie. He was bothered by a knee injury, but managed to keep in the game. He is rangy and well-built and very fast.

Burton Stratton is the cream of the goalies and without him Trade School would have finished in the second division. He hails from Sharon and experts refer to him as a second Dick Stewart of the Bruins.

Wins—Hughes, Mechanics Arts; Lawsia, English; Burke, Brighton; O'Leary, English; Carvin, Cheverus-town; McGuinness, Latin; Clifford, Commercial, Reilley, East Boston.

CARLARIS GETS HARDEST TEST IN DERBY

New York, March 29 (A.P.)—Carlaris, W. T. Anderson's three-year-old, which captured the Coffroth Handicap at Tijuana by small lengths, winning $70,700, faces a severe task in the Kentucky Derby if racing president is to be relied upon.

The colt was imported from England and only once in history has an imported horse won the money at Louisville. That was in 1916 when A. K. MacComber's Star Bank ran second to George Smith.

(A Miser Threat.)

WIVES! Do you realize that your sex spends 85 per cent. of all the money that is earned in this country?

Husbands! Do you know that your wives, mothers, sisters, aunts and sweethearts spend 85 cents out of every dollar in your pay envelopes?

So declares Mrs. Edith McCue Patterson, home budget specialist of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, an organization of more than 4,000,000 members all over the United States.

Wives and husbands—don't you want this money to be well spent?

The way to proper spending is the home budget. And the budget is a partnership, pure and simple.

This does not mean that Friend Wife spends the whole eighty-five cents on herself. It means that she directs the spending of it for shelter, food, clothing, and the running of the home.

No wife can keep a proper budget on an allowance which is only part of her husband's income. Nor can Friend Husband shield himself from all the responsibilities of the household and still be a "Dodgeteers" are strong for motto nights. We are nothing if not broad minded. We recognize the claim of the husband to keep a part of what he earns!

But the expenditures of the family can be properly planned only when the husband and wife each do their share.

I receive many letters like the following:

"My husband gives me $25 a week to run the home, and insists that all expenses out of his share of the income. How ought I to budget for food and clothes?"

It is impossible to answer this question without knowing the whole income, just as it is impossible for the wife to answer it herself, with only a vague line marking the division between her household's and her husband's expenses.

If their income, for example, were $40 a week, the wife should pay practically all the living costs out of her allowance. If on the other hand the husband earns $60 a week, the wife could not be expected to pay for rent, food and running expenses out of $25.

Feed your expenses and your money—then pool your ideas and your plans for spending—and presto! you have a budget.

Home Budget Editor:—I earn $30 a week and have a boarder who pays $10. For this he gets three meals a day and has his room. I have also my husband and two children. We can't seem to get ahead.

Mrs. L. O. K.

The ordinary $40 a week budget does not fit your case, as you do not have to supply clothes for five, but only food. Try this. Save $4, shelter; $5.50 ($220 a month) food, $16; clothing, $3; operating (fuel, etc.), $3.50, personal, $3.

Home Budget Editor:—My husband recently received a cut in his salary, and I would you please help me solve it? I spend from $18 to $20 a week for use of a hall. In addition to that, others pay for several years, my husband and myself.

Mrs. J. W. B.

Without knowing your income I cannot be exact. Ordinarily $18 a week would not be too much for food for six, especially when one is on a diet. Most specialists tell us this adds about one-tenth to the cost of food in a family.

Home Budget Editor:—I have been married only a short time and my husband makes $25 a week. Hitherto I have spent money for what we needed and saved what I could at the end of the week. I should like to make my income cover everything to the best advantage. We are paying $7.50 a week for two furnished rooms, heated, but are trying to find a tenement and want to buy our own furniture. Gas is about $1 a month, for cooking and electricity about $1. Insurance $3 and $5 dues once about $3 a week.

MRS. F. C. L.

Your proportions are very good, and you have stated in a few words the very purpose of a budget: to make the money "cover everything to the best advantage." As your rooms are heated, your rent is not excessive if you get an unheated flat you should pay less, and apply the difference on fuel, under "operating." Take out your saving at the BEGINNING of every week or it will slip away. Try this: Save $3.50 (including insurance); shelter, $7.50; food, $8; operating, $3; clothing, $3.75; personal, $1.75.

Mrs. M. N. G.—For $125 a month three in family, including baby, try this budget: Save $13 per month, shelter $30 food, $40; clothing, $18, operating, $17, personal, $9.

Mrs. $40a Week—So many readers have written for a budget for an income that I repeat it here. Much of it has been given before. Saving, $3.50; shelter, $7; food, $9.50; clothing, $5, operating, $5; personal, $5. This is for two or three in the family. For five, reduce on personal and increase on food. Try not to be stingy.

Mrs. T. F. L. writes: "My husband receives $35 for a weekly wage but, owing to unemployment, we have contracted a large bill. Our rent is $28 per month and I can't seem to get food under $15 a week, four in family. If you will suggest a budget by which I shall be able to pay a little on that bill, I shall appreciate it."

With the best will in the world, I can't budget for "no income." But I am very glad to outline a budget for your normal income, with allowance for paying bill, which you can turn into saving after the bill is paid, and so have something toward another possible time of unemployment: Saving, $7; food, $14; shelter, $6.50, clothing, $6.50; operating, $6; personal, $3.50; repayment on bill, $10.

Home Budget Editor:—My weekly income is $34. Out of this goes $5 for furniture, $6.25 for rent, $3 for electric light and telephone, 75 cents for insurance. Balance seems to go for food. I can't save a cent.

Mrs. R. S.

Save $3.75, including your insurance; shelter, $6.25; food, $8.50; clothing, $4.50, operating (light, telephone, etc.), $3; personal, $3.00; furniture payments, $5. You do not say how many there are in the family, and may have to alter this.

Home Budget Editor:—Will you assist me to budget the following salary? My husband gets $50 a week; family of five, rent $45 a month, not heated; garage, $9 a month, and insurance, $93 a year.

Mrs. O. H. C.

The $50 budget has already been published, but I will repeat it here. Your rent is not excessive for five people, although heating makes it rather expensive. Try to save $5, including insurance; rent (including garage, per week, $12.64; food, $15; clothing, $8; personal, including $6 per

Without knowing your income I cannot be exact. Ordinarily $18

What Humans Owe to Insects

By Charles A. L. Reed, M. D.,
Former President of the American Medical Association.

AS you know, insects live very close to man, but you may not realize how important a factor they are in his life.

To know which insects are friendly to you and which are hostile is, therefore, very important.

It was once thought that the lady bird beetle caused blight on beans, roses and other plants, but it is now known that it visits blighted plants to eat the sap which pests cause to exude. It is, therefore, a friend to be protected and encouraged.

The chief function of insects in nature, says Sir Wm. Hardy, F. R. S., in a recent article seems to be to destroy waste and decaying organic matter and to suppress excessive vegetation.

We are rather apt to underrate the use of this function. We are right to destroy house-flies and carrion flies in our houses, because they convey typhoid, dysentery, tuberculosis and other diseases, and even the ova of certain parasites, but if we took proper precautions to dispose of infected excreta and to protect food the fly would not be able to carry disease.

You should not concentrate all your energy on destroying insect life, but should attempt to put your house in order—and that means a lot.

If possible, clean, tidy up houses and the whole use of matter [illegible] has greatly reduced their numbers.

If we knew more about insects we might take more advantages of them, for instance, by encouraging those which prey on injurious species.

The introduction of new food plants into a country sometimes turns a harmless insect into a pest. The Colorado potato beetle was first observed as a harmless insect that ate nightshade. When the potato was cultivated extensively the beetle turned its attention to this more abundant supply of food and became destructive.

Measures of control should aim at protecting the individual against adult insects; destruction of incurably harmful insects and their larvae; removing breeding places and means of sustenance and protection of food and water from contamination.

Individuals can protect themselves by cleanliness of the person and surroundings, and public measures should aim at the avoidance of over-crowding and the efficient lighting of houses and stores, especially in malarious districts, where mosquitos abound. Town planning must include suitable subsoil drainage and clearance of brushwood.

Insecticides—poisons that kill insects—have not as yet been very satisfactory, and there is need for more experimental stations where the various necessary insects can be bred and examined to determine the value and action of these agents.

This is important, not only from a personal, but also from an economic point of view.

The bedrock of control is effective sanitation. The protection of food during manufacture and when exposed for sale is often greatly neglected. It is a simple matter to protect food in a house; screened meat safes, the screening of storerooms and kitchens and gauze covering for food set aside are not expensive.

To prevent the ravages of insects in food stores, mills and factories, attention must be paid to general cleanliness, the avoidance of accumulated dirt and refuse, efficient lighting and ventilation and the general screening of windows and doors.

A current of cool air is effective against moths, and premises which are not of modern construction should be periodically fumigated.

Honesty in Business

By Lucy Lowell

CAN you be wholly honest and still make a success in business?

One man told me: "Not if you're 'honest' according to the established ethical standard. But there are two sets of honesty: ethical honesty and commercial honesty.

"All big business understands the code of commercial honesty and if you live up to it, it's all they expect."

Another man said: "Business has got too big and complicated for the old-fashioned ideas of honesty to apply. You can be square but not what I'd call strictly honest."

Their idea of business—and it seems many have it—is to gain as much as possible. If it's at the expense of others, they're sorry but feel it can't be helped.

It's the notion of "Caveat emptor"—Let the buyer beware. And yet—A woman gave a sales girl a fifty-dollar bill the other day, thinking it a five. The overworked salesgirl failed to notice the mistake and the transaction went through.

It was in one of the biggest and busiest department stores in New York. So when the woman discovered her error and returned to report it she had little hope of recovering her loss.

To her surprise she was ushered into the manager's office and within a very few minutes was handed $50 less the price of her purchase.

"But you haven't had time to go over your sales for the day," she said. "How do you know that my claim is fair?"

The manager pointed to a placard on the wall over his desk. It read: "Do unto others as you'd have them do unto you."

"You see," he explained, "we're honest, and we take for granted that you are the same. It's a policy that we have followed thirty years, and you'd be surprised how little we've lost by it!

"We keep before us the idea of honesty in every activity of the store, and we've grown from a little notions shop to a firm doing millions of dollars' worth of business yearly. We've found that honesty pays."

Another woman I know had a somewhat similar experience with a taxicab company and through her, because she was so impressed by the policy of honesty, the company obtained a client whose account will run into hundreds monthly.

It rather looks as if you can be wholly honest in business, doesn't it?

The Londoner's Luggage always has been recognized as the very smartest. So it isn't surprising that a little leather roll-bag, in perfect imitation of the large ones Englishmen carry, should become the proper type of purse for tailored wear. Such a bag has the convenient zipper fastening.

Supplying Snappiness to the navy or black twill, short-coated, braid-bound Spring suit, a gay plaid taffeta scarf and lining to match are cleverly shown.

The Making of a Husband

By Ann Lisle

"I WILL," I said. "I'll talk to her. But I can't presume to advise her. I'll just tell her how you feel. And I'll send Mr. Lingard up with some of Jim's razor blades. You've a right to—the best setting we can give you. But I'd wish you'd wait. I'd like you to see the doctor first. I'd like to talk it over with Jim. You might feel so—different."

"Not in a million years," said Nicholas Perry. "Jeanie will see that. I tell you we understood each other—did from the first. She'll see it if she wants to. What the doctor says doesn't matter. My hands don't matter. Arlette would give up her voice itself to be hands to me. Jeanie must see it square-ly. She knows that to all of us—to every one concerned. She mustn't lie to herself. She must see where she is needed."

"Yes, yes," I cried, sadly, beginning to be more and more convinced, "I'll go tell her. I know she'll want to do the right thing. If she has to suffer a bit she can't help seeing that's fair, too, in view of all—"

"Of all I may have to pay, eh?" asked Nicholas Perry.

"Of all you risked for her, what I had intended saying," I corrected.

"At least it wouldn't be fair for me to have to pretend." Mr. Perry said quietly. "It seems to me that would be a bit too much to ask. I can't pretend. I can't hide my real feelings. I've tried to play up like a gentleman. But I've gone on as long as I could. Now I've got to quit pretending. She'll forgive me for that."

"Yes," I said gently, "Jeanie will forgive you for that. She won't expect you to hide your feelings now when you're trying so hard to be a good sport about—"

'About something vastly more important," Nicholas Perry said.

For a moment I thought he was speaking with grim restraint. Then suddenly I knew that he was ironically putting my thoughts into words. I felt the implied criticism and I asked gently:

"Do you feel that it is horrid of me to be more concerned about your future as a painter than about your future—with Jeanie?"

"Say it again!"

Nicholas Perry sat up in bed and stared at me with something in his eyes on which I had never reckoned.

"You can count on me," I said soothingly. I won't try to take her away from you. But it doesn't seem like you to try to win a woman through pity—"

"That's what I'm afraid of," he said.

"What?" I asked inanely.

"Haven't I been telling you all along? I'm afraid Jeanie will drama-tize me. She's got enough against Pat to be willing to make him pay. But she couldn't have suffered so over him, she couldn't mind his actions so if she didn't love him. She amused me. I wanted to help her. But I can't stand the thought of being helpless—out of my painting—and tied to a woman I admire—and pity, but don't love. Do you think I'm a cad? Do you think I should pretend to love Jeanie when I don't?"

"I think you're great!" I said, bending over the astonished Nicholas Perry and giving his auburn hair a thump. "I'm delighted with your news. But I think it's up to you to break it to Jeanie."—

"I can't!" Nicholas Perry cut in pleadingly. "Don't ask me to tell that poor little thing that I'm not interested in her—the way she wants me to be."

"How do you know what way she wants you to be interested?" I asked inexorably.

"You see, she had to tell some one about Pat—and Miss De Courcy—and Jim's heroic attempts to shield her from the knowledge of the truth," Nicholas Perry explained, thus clearing up a great deal that had puzzled me. "I was the only person to whom she could talk, so she confided in me. I pitied her. I could understand her humiliation. I liked her. I played up. I knew it would restore her self-respect to feel that she could count on me'—"

"So you let her think you loved her." I suggested, feeling that Nicholas Perry could do nothing more helpful and healthful than to stand off and get a perspective on himself and the situation.

"She—inferred that," he agreed.

"And you 'inferred' that she loved you?"

"I'm not a conceited fool," protested Mr. Perry.

"No but women do find you attractive."

"Stop making fun of me."

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Will you kindly tell me whether it is correct for a gentleman to remove his hat in an elevator in the presence of ladies? Also is there any difference between the correct way in an office building elevator or a hotel elevator?

N. N. A.

IN the elevator of an apartment house or hotel or in a club, a gentleman takes off his hat when there are ladies in the elevator. In the elevators of business buildings [illegible] are not required to do so. And this is reasonable. The elevators of [illegible] apartment houses are considered rooms—and the elevators of business buildings are considered too busy and too crowded. Between these two kinds of buildings is the department stores. In elevators here men are not exactly required to take off their hats, since the building is more in the nature of a business building, and since the elevator is apt to be too crowded to have it sensible that a man should take up the room to raise his arm to take off his hat. But many men do take off their hats if the elevator is not crowded.

"YOU SAID IT, MARCELINE!"

By Marceline D'Alroy

NOTHING makes a man
More tired than
A WOMAN
Who insists on going on
Loving him, when HE
Has stopped loving
HER. Women think this
Constancy is a COMPLIMENT in
A man, but MEN
Seem to think
It is an INSULT
To their INTELLIGENCE.
MEN who go on
Loving A WOMAN
When SHE is tired
Are often A BORE,
But a WOMAN who insists
On loving a man
When he's DISINTERESTED
Is EXASPERATING.
WHAT IS DEAD should be Given a DECENT
BURIAL; and MOST men
WILL give a woman this
LAST COURTSY:
But women BURY NOTHING,
They only HIDE their old
Loves away in CORNERS.
And then PRETEND to FORGET THEM.

Sore throats need this Double-Treatment

YOUR sore, aching throat probably needs the soothing, healing vapors that arise from Vicks VapoRub when it is rubbed over throat and chest at bedtime. And Vicks acts two ways at once:

(1) It is vaporized by the body heat and inhaled right to the inflamed air passages, loosening the phlegm and easing the difficult breathing.

(2) At the same time it warms and stimulates the skin like an old-fashioned poultice, "drawing out" the pain and congestion, and thus helps the vapors inhaled to relieve the congestion.

Don't hide yours any longer. Accept this remarkable dental test that restores "off-color" teeth to charming whiteness, and makes gums firm and pretty

Dental science has made some important discoveries in lightening cloudy teeth—a new method in tooth and gum treatment.

It acts on new principles. In a few days you can work a transformation on your teeth. Can change you whole appearance.

Now a 10-day test is being offered free. Send the coupon.

It's just a film

ordinary brushing won't end

Run your tongue across your teeth. You will feel a film . . . a slippery, viscous coating that dulls and clouds their beauty.

Ordinary methods won't successfully combat it. That's why, no matter how hard you try now, your teeth remain "off color."

Whiten teeth, Firm the Gums

Remove that film and what you see will amaze you. You are simply hiding their beauty now . . . just like grime on ivory.

Film is charged, too, with most tooth and gum troubles. It clings to teeth, gets into crevices and stays. Germs by the millions multiply in it and lay your teeth open to decay. And they, with tartar, are a chief cause of pyorrhea.

Old methods failed in combating it successfully. The new ones were found and embodied in a new-type dentifrice, Pepsodent.

It acts to curdle the film and then removes it. Then to firm the gums and protect them.

Results are quick and convincing. Largely on dental advice the world has turned to this new scientific method.

Love Story of a Boston Girl

to foot, but her voice was no more than a silvery ripple. "No," she said, "I won't let you leave this house until you promise me that you won't let Ranny's father know that I'm giving music lessons."

She had never talked this way to Aunt Agony before in all her life. She had obeyed her from her earliest childhood. But now she felt as if she were ready to defy her or anybody else on earth to protect Ranny.

"It wouldn't do the least bit of good for you to go to Father Phelps, anyway, Aunt Agony," she went on firmly. "Suppose he did get angry with Ranny and put him out of the firm? What good would that do? I'd only have to work twice as hard as I do now until Ranny got another job."

She knew there was no answer to that argument.

And Aunt Agony knew it, too. She started suddenly on another tack.

"Look at yourself," she said, sweeping Sylvia up and down with her fishy eyes. "Wearing the same clothes you had a year and a half ago—before you were married! A fine market you've brought your beauty and your brains to, haven't you?"

She looked scornfully around her at the tiny flat with its cheap, pretty furniture; then at the baby playing on the floor with a string of bright wooden beads.

"Here you are, stuck in a little flat, saddled with a baby and a good-for-nothing husband that can't even support you——"

"Oh, you can't stop me!" she went on as Sylvia raised a warning hand. "I'll say my say and then you can put me out if you want to! Do you know what your duck of a husband's doing while you're up here giving music lessons? He's riding around Boston with some woman! I saw him with my own eyes not more than a half hour ago!"

Sylvia Overcome

She nodded with her best I-told-you-so air, and folded her arms like a female Napoleon.

Sylvia's white face went a shade whiter, but she didn't say a word.

A pang of jealousy shot through her like bodily pain.

"That's what I came to tell you today and this is the thanks I get!" added Aunt Agony.

"But why tell me? Why hurt me? I'm just one big hurt and ache as it is," Sylvia moaned silently.

But with a superhuman effort she managed to smile and to say aloud in a careless way! "Or, that's just little Puss Marsh! She has a sort of hero-worshiping crush on Ranny and she follows him around. He can't stop her."

"This wasn't Puss Marsh or anybody like her!" broke in Aunt Agony, so sharply that the words seemed to snap out of her mouth. "I know little Puss Marsh, but I never saw this woman before. She looked fully 35 years old and she wore earrings—long ones that pretty nearly down to her shoulders!"

Again that little forced laugh of Sylvia's ripped out like molten silver. "I'll have to look after Ranny better than I'm doing, won't I?" she asked lightly.

Aunt Agony grunted. "You know the old saying, 'He that needs look ing after isn't worth looking after,' she chanted glibly. "And that's true of Ranny! He isn't worth your bothering about. If I were you I'd put a spoke in his wheel, I'll tell you! I'd tell him that he'd give me enough money to live on or I'd leave him! You may as well leave him now, anyway. He'll never be anything but the bad egg he is now. People don't change. The fox may grow grass, but never good,' you know."

Sylvia shook her lovely head, with its waves of soft dark hair that shone like polished black satin above her sapphire eyes. And Aunt Agony, looking at her, thought suddenly how some old painter of Madonnas would have loved to put those clear, calm eyes on canvas.

Ranny's New Flame

"You're a fool, that's what you are!" she explained. "to let yourself be buried here in this place! With a voice like yours! If you must give those piano lessons, why don't you spend the money on studying with Miss Sharp? She says that you have a concert voice—and you could earn more money singing at one concert than you could earn giving music lessons for a month!"

That very thought had occurred to Sylvia more than once.

She had been slowly making up her mind that as soon as she had bought some winter flannels for Ranny, Junior, and paid the grocery bill for last month she would take some more singing lessons from her old teacher.

"I ought to do it—and I will do it!" she decided an hour later as she sat alone at the kitchen table eating some toast that she had made for her lonely supper. Ranny had telephoned that he was going to dine downtown with "a business friend."

Sylvia couldn't help wondering if the "business friend" wore long earrings that hung almost down to her shoulders.

It turned out that she did wear them—this "business friend" of Ranny's.

Her name was Jane Brackett, and when she came home at 10 that night he told Sylvia all about her, sitting at the side of the bed. She listened calmly, holding her magazine in her hand as if she wanted to go on reading it.

But, as a matter of fact, every nerve in her body was alive to the tale that Ranny was telling her. It struck her suddenly that he was telling it to her as a son might have told his mother about a new girl he had met.

"Dad got a new saleswoman today," he began. "We're opening a tract of land out near Bedford, and he wanted some extra people. This girl came in—a very interesting type, Sylvia. I'm going to bring her out to dinner some night soon. I know you'll be great friends—she's just the kind of girl you like.'

Fears of Rival

Sylvia wanted dreadfully to remark that she loathed women who wore long earrings, but she managed to keep her tongue between her teeth.

"Her name is Mrs Brackett—Jane Brackett," Ranny said, getting up to take off his tie and collar. "She looks a bit vampish, but she isn't."

"I thought you liked little fluffy girls like—oh, like Puss March, for instance," Sylvia answered, opening her eyes innocently. "What is this Mrs. Brackett—a grass widow or an honest-and-truly one?"

Ranny stuttered a little. "W-why, she divorced her husband about a year ago, I think she said," he admitted. "She's a very sensitive sort of woman, and from what she says, he must have been a great bull necked fellow with no thought of anything but making money. She has had a terrible trying to live with him. She was just crushed—"

"Poor sensitive plant!" cooed Sylvia. Ranny looked at her sharply to see if she was "spoofing" him, but her eyes were gentle as a child's.

"Let's have her over to supper on Sunday night," she suggested, after a moment of silence. "Sunday night suppers are so easy to get—I can just throw some salad together and make some sandwiches and cake."

Ranny beamed, looking more like a Greek god than usual, as he strode about the room in his white bathrobe, collecting his shaving and his matches and the detective story he was reading.

When he was asleep Sylvia tiptoed across the room and took his watch from the pocket of his trousers. She carried it out into the living room and pried off the back of it with her thumb nail. The snapshot of Puss March was still in it!

"But I wonder how long it will stay there," Sylvia thought to herself, with the saddest little smile you ever saw, as she went back into the bedroom. "Not very long, probably, now that he's met this Mrs. Brackett.

There had been a time when Ranny had carried her own picture in the back of his watch

Sorrow and Jealousy

But that time seemed very long ago, now—long ago and far away.

There is sorrow that is too great for tears—and jealousy that eats far down into the soul.

Sylvia knew both that night—both the sorrow and the jealousy.

But it was something else that made her stare dry-eyed into the darkness and wish that she could shed the tears that would not come.

She was bitterly disappointed in Ranny. And it was disappointment in him that was breaking her heart. She had thought him so fine, so godlike, once upon a time. She had worshiped him—and now she only loved him.

"I could give him up to a real love affair!" she said to herself, clenching her hands so that the nails cut little half-moons in her palms, "but to watch him go on with these silly little crushes—these beastly little thrills—"

He turned in his sleep and murmured something that she couldn't make out. But the sound of his voice stirred her, as it always did. She swung her feet over the side of her own bed and leaned low over him—leaned over him and kissed him softly, tenderly, almost as a mother might have kissed her sleeping child.

The morning sunlight ended Sylvia's feeling of unhappiness, as it so often did.

She was a naturally happy, gay thing, and the autumn brightness and the smell of burning leaves outside filled her with a heavenly glow of well being.

She sang as she bathed the baby and put the coffee on to boil.

There was a joyful lilt in her voice as she telephoned. Fay to ask her and her husband over to supper on Sunday night

"I think I'll ask Peter, too," she decided. "There's no reason for Ranny's being jealous of him. I just will ask him."

She did, and Peter accepted. "I'll bring down some cider from the farm," he said.

Peter's farm was one that he had inherited from his maternal grandfather, and it was the only place that he and Sarah called "home."

Then, with real enjoyment, Sylvia telephoned Puss March and asked her to come to the Sunday night supper, too.

"I'll send Ranny for you, Puss," she said, and Puss couldn't keep her pleasure out of her voice when she thanked her.

"Ranny will have quite a time with all his old flames here—Fay and Puss, not to mention myself!" she told herself, with an inward chuckle, as she hung up the receiver. "This new Mrs. Brackett will have to watch her step if she wants to keep him vamped! Well, anyway, it will be interesting to watch the fur fly!"

She honestly looked forward to Sunday night, at first Then she began to dread it

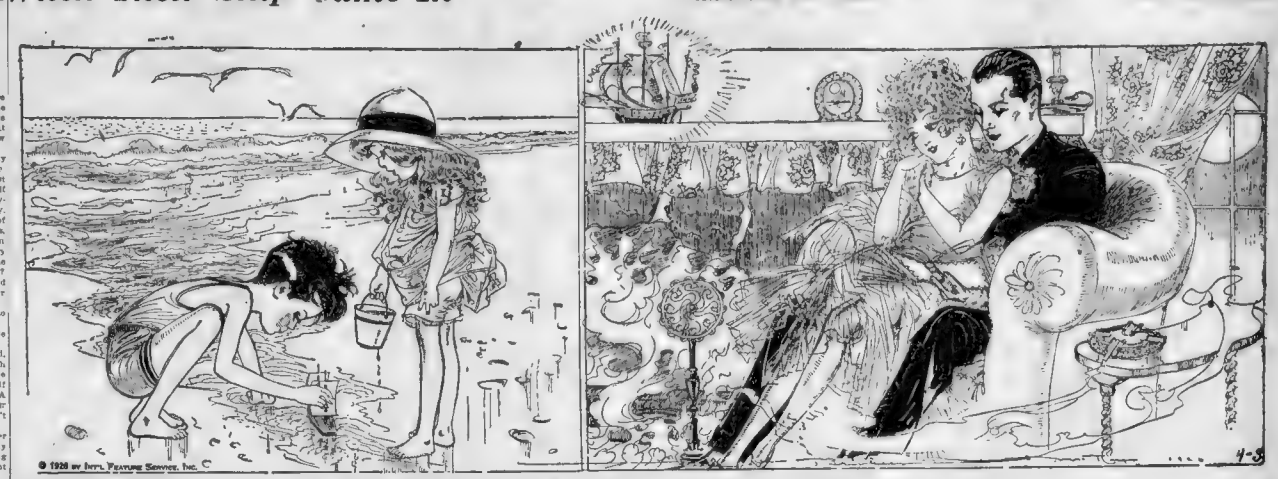
How does Ranny act when he finds Sylvia entertains not only Mrs. Brackett, but Puss and Fay besides. What do these women think of each other?

When Their Ship Came In

After a Journey of Many Years It Sailed Home Laden With Treasure

DRAWN BY NELL BRINKLEY



© 1928 BY INT'L FEATURE SERVICE, INC.

TWENTY years ago a little boy, a dark boy with a lock hanging over his forehead in the manner of a shaggy pony's foretop, with sparkling eyes, and a little girl, a fair little girl with a soft bouquet of golden ringlets between her shoulder-blades, with starry blue eyes like the sky straight overhead on a full Summer's day, these two played on a seabeach of clean sand and tiny, tenderly pink shells and bigger, grayer ones of the shape of a gnome's ear; and down a pleasant little tunnel of sea-water that filled with the inwash of the waves and hurried out again with the entire in swift ripples like a miniature mountain stream, they sailed a home made boat with two pieces of curved paper for sails.

And when the tide turned, quite suddenly the little boat fled down the rivulet and instead of floating softly back again as it had ever before, rushed into the small turmoil of foam at the edge of the rollers, was seen and gone! Out to the big sea waves. And the small boy and girl did not see the little boat again for twenty years. By the way, its little girl and boy thought each other perfect beings.

Twenty years later—well maybe not that many—but almost—the grown boy and girl met beside a big fire in their own brand new house. The girl had a shining ring with orange blossom etched around it. Everything was brand new, including the aspect of Love's face—or though they had known him a long time, somehow they did not remember to have seen this person that made life wonderful before. They had glassed chints curtains and a padded chair big enough for two

And over the mantel-piece stood a ship—the kind that brides want on their mantels—all golden sails and curly flags and little lanterns

Their little boat had come back—home at last—glorified —the "ship that came in," the same little boat that set sail long ago, back again—a treasure-ship.

And by the way, the boy and girl thought each other more perfect beings than ever! —NELL BRINKLEY.

Sunshine Out of Rain

By L. Lamar Matthews

EVEN before the "All School Hikers" reached the lodge on the e-de of Old Bald Top Mountain it had begun to rain. Just as they carried in the last of the supplies for the week-end camping party the downpour started in earnest.

Then a howl went up from twenty freshman, their day in the woods was spoiled. When they left the city early that morning the sun was shining and the birds were calling all young creatures to come out and frolic in the gladness of a Spring day. Now they would be shut in for hours.

It was Billy Wayne who first recovered from the blow. "Let's eat!" he suggested. Immediately there was a perceptible change for the better in the cheerfulness of the boys. "Grape juice!" Billy shouted, as he began unpacking the kit his mother had filled with provisions.

"Save it 'till last," another boy pleaded. And so the bottle of grapejuice was opened and set upon the improvised table, while the boys partook of the viands they had brought from home.

When they were lingering over the last bits Mr. Gray their leader, said, "Let me show you an experiment."

As he arranged for the experiment the boys watched eagerly. Mr. Gray filled one glass with water and another with grape juice. Over the glass of water he placed a card and then inverted the glass so that it fit exactly atop the glass of grape juice. Then he carefully slipped the card aside. And twenty boys watched with breathless interest while the grape-colored fluid rose slowly to the top of the top glass and the water descended gradually to the bottom of the other glass.

"Let test ry it," begged a bright-eyed boy—which was exactly what Mr. Gray had intended.

After that one of the older lads said, "I know another experiment." So, taking a tumbler about three-fourths full of water he placed over the top a stiff piece of paper. Then he inverted the glass in his palm. That left a vacuum in the top of the glass. He lifted the glass in his hand and although it was upside down no water spilled.

The astonished boys turned in quiring eyes upon their instructor. "It does not spill because of the pressure of the air on the outside, which is due to the partial vacuum on the inside," he explained

After that somebody found an old piece of rubber tube and placed it in a pail of water, thus showing how a siphon works. In the midst of siphoning somebody cried, "The sun is shining !" And they all rushed out of doors. From that time on the camping trip was one long joy.

By a little clever manoeuvering a crowd of disgruntled youngsters had been entertained all the morning. The ills which would naturally arise from the discomfort of twenty boys shut up in a shack on a rainy day had been avoided. Their had had no difficulties to settle, no problems to solve. He prevented them by keeping the boys interested.

The mate stopped and looked at one of the crew who was struggling with an unruly piece of machinery. "What seems to be the trouble?" he asked.

"Just before we put into port this machine kicked up and we can't seem to get it going right since," replied the sailor. "I just discovered that a part is missing and now it looks as though there would have to be a new part, but where can we get it in Charlestown?"

"Well," the officer answered, "Boston is just a short ride from here and the last time we were anchored at the Navy Yard, I found that the Boston American conducts a shopping information Service. It is called the Where-Can-I-Buy Service If you don't know where to buy any kind of merchandise they will send you to the store or person that sells it. They told me where I could have a hole in my uniform mended and now the coat looks as good as new I told several of the men about it as I knew they were strangers in this part of the States. They have from time to time mentioned that the Service has helped them out in locating several things they wanted to buy, but did not know where to get it."

"You just go to their headquarters at 5 Winthrop Square, Boston, and I know you will find out just what company handles those engines." "That's a good idea, I'll try them this afternoon," said the sailor to himself.

DAILY SHORT STORY

SPRING ETERNAL

By Maria C. Luttrell

IN her straight satin gown, against the background of heavy velvet drapes of rich, warm color, Nona McIntyre looked like the statue of a beautiful woman as she sat, alone, at the massive ebony table. A butler, stiff and unbending, the perfect servant, stood behind her. A silver wine cooler, filled with hothouse flowers, ornamented the lace covered table.

She apparently had no appetite for food. She broke off a leaf of delicate artichoke and, dipping it into butter sauce, tried to eat it. For she knew that her old cook, who had been with her for twenty years, had made a great effort to prepare something that would tempt her.

"I do not wish anything more, James," she said. "Tell Mattie the dinner was lovely."

"But, Madame, there is your favorite pudding for dessert tonight."

"I cannot eat, James," she told him, and there was a break in her full, deep voice. "I've always had Billy. I cannot swallow when I remember that he has gone—gone away forever."

But Madame still has so much to make her happy.

She stepped through the wide doors to a terrace that overlooked a charming garden. The first stars were glimmering wanly in the sky. A light Spring breeze brought whiffs of poeticus ornatus from massed planting along the borders of flower pots. A church bell began pealing softly down in the village. Nona shivered a little. Time was when she had slipped her hand in her father's at the sound of church bells and had trotted beside him to the old Methodist meeting house, where a heavy voice intoned, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden."

She wished that those days might return. Where could she look for comfort now? Some poet had wisely said, "I myself am heaven and hell." He was right. She knew that she had made her own sorrow and travail of spirit.

Boy and Girl

She had loved Jerry Martin. Boy and girl they had grown up together in a little town. The thoughts, hopes and ambitions of one became common property. The world was theirs because they had each other. Then Billy McIntyre had swooped down like a golden eagle and because he had showered her with magnificent gifts, she had married him within a few weeks' time. They had gone abroad on their honeymoon. Nice and Cannes had been their playground. Paris meant enticing shops, furs, satins, creations of world-famed artists. Billy McIntyre had loved her body. It was beautiful and he took pride in showing off his lovely young wife.

Then Billy Junior had come and the unhappiness that had been creeping upon her seemed to recede into a shadowy background. She adored the boy. She was never happy away from him. At first big Billy complained about it, said that two good nurses could take care of any kid. But Nona would not agree. So eventually, quite suddenly one day, he had gone away with a notorious woman of dance hall fame. Later he had been killed by a foreigner, jealous of Billy's paramour.

Nona had left Europe and opened the old home place of the McIntyres, a magnificent estate near a small village. She determined to rear her boy according to her own father's standards of life. She had sent him to fine schools, had traveled with him, had lavished love and care upon him. And six months after he had come home to stay with her he had run away, just as his father before him had done, with a cheap, common creature in the village.

Heart Beat High

The thought that he was gone, that the last hope she had in the world had been taken from her, was slowly crucifying Nona. Her heart, that had beat high with ambition for her good-looking son seemed a leaden weight in her breast. How dearly she had paid for blighting Jerry Martin's hopes! What poor returns she had received for sacrificing happiness for wealth. What were diamonds, vast estates, everything that money could buy, when the heart was crushed and broken?

The last peal of the church bell trembled into silence. Faintly she heard the music of the pipe organ which she herself had donated to the church. And her heart turned back, as all hearts do when the burdens of life grow oppressive and unbearable, to the faith of her fathers. She went in and snatched up a velvet coat and started walking rapidly down the path toward the village.

It was Lent and there was service every night. She remembered that someone had told her a famous Bishop would be there for several days.

She slipped into the back seat of the church. She closed her eyes and longed for words with which to pray. But no prayer came. Her thoughts, like wild birds, were circling round and round. They darted out toward Billy, toward the agony of the past, toward the bleak night of the future.

"'For He shall give His angles charge over thee in all thy ways. . .'"

The deep, sonorous voice of the Bishop was quoting from the Scriptures.

"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

His words were like the healing waters of Lebanon, laving her soul. Her wandering thoughts began to shape themselves into a winged prayer, A prayer for peace. A prayer for Billy to come home to her, to lay his head down on her breast with the old boyish abandon, his arms tight around her, whispering the sweetest words a woman ever heard—the broken love vows of her first born son.

Peace Came

And slowly peace began to wrap Nona in the mantle of comfort.

Presently she opened her eyes and looked up at the speaker. She gave a little start and leaned forward, breathlessly. For there in the flowing robes of a man of God stood Jerry Martin, Jerry Martin who had once held her heart in the cup of his freckled hand.

When the last hymn had been sung, Jerry came straight down the aisle to greet her. "I was just going up to see you after the service was over. I didn't know until tonight that you lived here. It's good to see you again, Nona. Will you wait for me? We'll walk back together."

He was smiling at her with the old whimsical look in his brown eyes. The flesh pots had beckoned her away from him and she had gone, leaving him a tragic figure, disillusioned alone on the flowering hills of youth. But he had found peace. Success. And happiness, probably. Everything that had been denied her.

He slipped his hand under her arm as they turned to enter the winding driveway that led to her magnificent home.

Tell me all about yourself!" He said simply.

She did not spare herself. She told him of her experiences and the last tragedy that threatened to swamp her soul in misery. "You see I can never be happy again. I sold myself and I will have to pay until the end of time for me."

"But Nona, we must pray for the boy to come back to you."

"Oh, Jerry," she cried eagerly, "do you honestly believe that prayers are ever answered?"

"I know they are," he told her quietly. "For I have prayed for more than twenty years just to see you again."

The breath of the mock orange was in the air, that sweet fragrance that tells a listening world the Winter has passed and that the earth is teeming with new life. A subtle something like a dream of better things to do.

Nona looked up into the illumined face of the stalwart man beside her. Its fingers had tightened, possessively on her arm. And all at once she felt the leave ' human companionship, that ; ift without price, stir once mo. her heart. And she knew that as long as life lasts, hope does grow and will bloom forever by springs eternal.

MEDBURY SAYS—

By John P. Medbury

LABOR conditions in the United States are pretty good, but what we need most is a calendar with more days on it.

THE working people ought to have more days off so that they could loaf on their own time.

IT wouldn't cost much to print calendars with six or seven 4th of Julys on them.

WE could get along with one Washington a Birthday if they'd give us three Thanksgivings.

OF course, we have fifty-two weekends, but with baths on Saturday and church on Sunday, a workingman doesn't have much time to himself.

EVERYBODY bathes on Saturday because Saturday comes before Sunday and cleanliness is next to godliness.

A LABORER gets soiled on his employer's time, he why should he clean himself on his own?

WHEN a traveling salesman takes a bath it goes on his expense account.

A WORKINGMAN is foolish to bathe for nothing.

LABORERS ought to install time clocks on their bathtubs.

THEY should charge seventy-five cents an hour for bathing.

NOT only that, but they're entitled to time and a half on Saturdays.

IF this rules goes into effect, a workingman can make more money in a tub than out of it.

THE only tools he'll need will be a sponge and a cake of soap.

FOXY GRANDPA'S INTERESTING BEDTIME STORY

By Foxy Grandpa

"YOU know," said Bobby, "this snow would be all right if we were in the country, but it's not much fun in the city."

"And I have a very difficult time in finding galoshes to fit me," said Bunny.

"How would you like to go to Florida?" I asked.

"Fine!" shouted my little friends in chorus, and Bunny walked right to the closet and brought out his Panama hat and put it on with his two ears sticking out through the holes in it for that purpose.

I called up the station and got our reservations, and the night after that we were on our way South.

We went right into the heart of Florida into the lake country, where the Everglades were just as they were when Ponce de Leon went in his search for the Fountain of Youth.

I noticed that whenever we went down to the lake to get into our rowboat that Bunny always wanted to jump into my pocket. I thought at first it was because he was nervous about falling overboard, but I found out differently afterward.

I saw he was very much frightened, so I quickly put my oars into the oarlocks and rowed quite a distance away. Bunny calmed down and then I asked him what had frightened him.

"I saw two terrible eyes looking at us, Foxy Grandpa. You know, sometimes, you can just see their eyes and nothing else, because they are made that way, those awful popeyes, to stick out of the water.

"What kind of eyes are you talking about? asked Bobby, resting his fishing rod across his knees for a moment.

"Alligator eyes," blessed Bunny.

"Why?" said Bunny. "It's the most dangerous thing in the world, for any animal to come down to the shore of one of these lakes to get a drink. You see those big monsters just look as if they were asleep but they're not. The first thing you know they swim under the water, go up to the bank where the animal is peacefully drinking, give it a bang with its tail, haul it down into the water, hold it there until it is drowned and then eat it at leisure.

"Ugh!" said Bobby, "isn't that terrible?"

"Yes, it is," murmured Bunny sadly. "Many of my family have ended their days in that way."

"But do you know," said Bobby, "there is something I don't understand. They're not fish and yet they can stay under water for such a long time. How do they do it?"

"Very simple," said Bunny. "They each have a valve at the back of their throat which just locks up like a submarine and keeps all the water out of their lungs when they're submerged."

"I'll bet I could break all records for swimming under water if I had a valve in my throat like that," said Bobby, feeling his little neck.

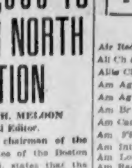
$7,000,000 TO BETTER NORTH STATION

By FRANK H. MELSON
Financial Editor.

Homer Loring, chairman of the executive committee of the Boston & Maine Railroad, states that the company will expend between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 in the North Station better. On this money he estimates the railroad will earn 15 to 15 per cent. annually.



Homer Loring

He expresses confidence that the government will reduce the interest charges on railroad loans, which would, as planned, save the Boston & Maine $800,000 annually and the New Haven $1,600,000 a year.

"It takes a lot of coal to run a railroad. If the Harvard stadium had been the coal top of the Boston & Maine in 1925, the fuel consumed by its locomotives in passenger and freight service would have filled the great amphitheatre to the top three times. And these would still be almost enough coal left to fill it again. The Boston & Maine in 1925 used 1,141,441 net tons of coal, which cost $6,593,046," Frank Joyce, assistant to President James Hustis, tells me.

Yet the most interesting of the railroad's figures on coal consumption, probably, are those of fuel saving. It is shown that the railroad by making its tons of coal do more work in 1925 than ever before saved by comparison with 1920, 193,058 net tons of coal, or enough to fill two-thirds of the big stadium bin. This represents the results of increased efficiencies and economies in fuel consumption over the past five years.

The saving in 1925, as compared with the previous year, amounted to 43,258 net tons. Consumption was reduced from 183 pounds for each big 1,000 tons of freight and equipment, including locomotive and tender, one mile, to 146 pounds, and for hauling a passenger car one mile from 19.1 pounds to 16.5 pounds.

A further effect to effect fuel saving was begun the first of the year under a novel plan. Using the budget system, coal consumption is being measured by operating divisions in tons and pounds per unit of service, but as the expenditures of the railroad generally are budgeted in dollars and cents, each division superintendent has been made responsible for his share of the coal budget, the figures of which have been based on a reduction of 5 per cent from the consumption unit of last year. If this further saving is effected it will mean an additional economy of $1,073 on this item this year.

Notwithstanding a budget deficit caused by the storm conditions of February and the generally severe winter of 1926, efforts are being made to gain the economies that were anticipated during the remainder of the year.

Edward J. Pearson, president of New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, says the plan to open up route to New York Central by a "super plan" which would give Long Island shipyards technical connection with West, but which, from general standpoint, is unlikely that will be put into practice. In case of marine strike New Haven and Pennsylvania roads would then be open route to other roads and Pennsylvania lines could also be used for freight in such an emergency, he states. He said that the New Haven has no air mail route between New England and South around congestion of New York city, and the next and final step in consolidation of railroads between Bay Ridge and Greenville, N. J., explains President Pearson.

William U. Durand and a party of friends will leave today for Cuba bound to inspect oil properties in which he is interested. Airplane of Cuba trip is understood that Durand other large consolidation of oil companies is likely to be announced, in which Independent Oil & Gas will figure prominently.

TRADE INDICES PROVE PUZZLE TO ANALYSTS

Business and trade present so many cross currents that analysts are finding it difficult to chart the future trend of business. Freight car loadings, bank clearings, savings bank deposits, the writing of new life insurance, and steel production, all of which are believed to possess econometric significance, are running close to record levels.

On the other hand commodity prices have declined for ten consecutive weeks, a falling off has been reported in building construction, and automobile sales, and there has been a slackening in other lines of trade and industry, with many concerns operating at a small margin of profit.

RAILROAD EARNINGS IN MONTH MOSTLY BETTER

Additional reports of railroad earnings for February show improved results. Net operating income of the Chesapeake & Ohio advanced to $2,092,142 from $1,764,847 in February last year. The Denver & Rio Grande Western reported net operating income of $413,911 against $733,615. Seaboard Air Line's net operating income was $793,371 against $1,776,117 year ago; the Ann Arbor's decreased to $41,182 from $74,772, and the Western Maryland's increased to $418,480 from $351,371.

FINANCE

—By B. C. FORBES—

Business in most lines is doing all right, but New Year hopes were wrong. Expectations have suffered more than actual conditions. A boom was looked for and, of course, it has not materialized—happily.

What do the facts show?

Dividend increase continue to be the rule, reductions are exceptions.

Nearly every annual report now appearing reveals increasing earnings and financial strength.

Current railway traffic is of record volume and earnings are the best since the 1920 transportation act was passed.

The steel industry never in peace times was busier filling genuine orders for immediate consumption.

Automobile production is correspondingly high, the car builders' motor company announced that it has only thirty days' stock in dealers' hands.

Milder weather has quickened building operations, which continue to be of great magnitude.

Marshall Field & Co. at the week-end reported: "Current wholesale distribution of dry goods was ahead of last week and also exceeded last year's figures for corresponding week. There were more customers in the market than during the corresponding period of 1925."

* * *

Labor continue to be unusually well employed, with no downward trend in wages in sight. The increase in income tax receipts despite the substantially lower rates levied, is very properly interpreted as reflecting very widespread prosperity.

STANDARD OILS PAYING NEARLY BEST DIVIDENDS

Total of $40,901,833 was distributed in cash dividends during first quarter of 1926 by so-called Standard Oil group. This was an increase of $6,343,905 over payments of first quarter of last year and largest made by Standard Oil group for first quarter of any year since dissolution, excepting first quarter of 1919 when an extra dividend of $93,236,362 was paid by Standard Oil of New Jersey from repayment of loans to former subsidiaries.

CONDITIONS in territory served by St. Paul are called encouraging by M. E. Pierpont, chief traffic officer.

MARKET Street Railway earned earned $3.56 a share of prior preferred 9 per cent, cumulative stock in 1926, against $6.13 a share in 1924.

DESERT GOLD AT OLYMPIA

Zane Grey's popular novel, "Desert Gold," has been done over for the movies and now presents itself on the screen at the Washington Street Olympia. Thrilling adventures on the Mexican border and in Arizona side during the closing years of the nineteenth century furnish the action.

George B. Seitz, who made "The Vanishing American" and other notable Western productions, is responsible for the direction and Neil Hamilton, Shirley Mason, Robert Fraser and William Powell are the principals.

The scenes were taken on the great Mojave Desert in order to film the "Slope of Death" sequence in which a huge landslide of rocks goes crashing down the hillside to destroy Powel and his supporters, as a marauding band, intent upon the capture of Miss Mason, pursue.

Another thrilling moment occurs when Fraser starts a tremendous scuffle in a barroom, where his pal is held captive, in order to cover his fleeing friend's escape with the heroine. Many more breath-taking episodes are plentifully scattered throughout the action. Nor is romance forgotten, for Shirley Mason has more than one admirer and the winning suitor is unknown until the close.

Vaudeville and shorter screen subjects complete the bill.

"BEN HUR" WON POPE'S FAVOR

There have been few stories in literature so advantageously set as Gen. Lew Wallace's "Ben-Hur," for the priceless spectacle of which is at the Colonial Theatre. As a book, it enjoyed such favor that for years it reigned as best seller. As a play its stage popularity was of similar calibre. And now in pictured version it appears destined to overwhelm the favor enjoyed in its other guises.

This would stamp "Ben-Hur" as sufficiently honored. However, there were translations in a number of languages, and one of these, the Italian, brought it a spiritual honor coveted and granted to but few novels.

When the venerated Pope Leo XIII was given a copy of the story in Italian he read it with such interest and pleasure that he publicly blessed the book. This blessing resulted in its being accepted and read by that great host of readers who are numbered, not only among the followers of the Roman Church, but by those who recognize the nice discrimination practised by the great fathers of the Catholic Church.

There is another valuable quality to this story which has led many to cherish the fact that it has won the high honor of a papal blessing. This lies in the fact that though the author sub-titled his book "a story of the Christ," its religious spirit is subtly interwoven in a story of glorious and dramatic action, its character moving in a plot charged with vital and flowing action.

DOUBLE BILL AT FENWAY

Beatrice Burton's novel, "The Flapper Wife," was made the screen debut here at the Fenway as "His Jazz Bride," a film produced under the direction of Herman Raymaker and with Mae Murray and Marie Prevost as the principals.

The story is of a gay little bride counseled by her friends that the only way to make a success of modern marriage is to make a slave of her husband before he makes ones of her. She follows this brilliant advice, but almost wrecks the partnership and only realizes her folly when she and her jazz-mad friends are nearly drowned after a gay party on a pleasure boat. It has drama, comedy, thrills and a sugar-coated moral for all.

The companion picture on the double bill is "Red Dice," a Cecil B. DeMille production, starring Rod LaRocque with Marguerite de La Motte in support. It is a melodramatic comedy with a strong plot, treating with gunmen and ill-gotten gains together with an expose of the criminal industry of organized bootlegging.

Disgusted? Yes, Sir---

And No "Maybe"

Lloyd George says the League of Nations, with its recent display of suspicions, hatreds, jealousies, must disgust the United States.

It does, and the objection to have anything to do with that League directly or through the World Court backdoor dates back to Harding's election. Then, and later in the Coolidge election, the United States, by a plurality of seven million votes, said it preferred to manage its own affairs apart from Europe, as George Washington had advised.

Friends of President Coolidge, some the ablest, among those that would like to see him re-elected, are trying to push him and his Administration into the World Court.

That is the surest way to prevent the re-election in 1928 to which President Coolidge is entitled.

The President and his Administration can manage affairs in this country.

But once we enter that European court, with a courteous Japanese gentleman sitting at one end of that august bench, and a British gentleman at the other, the situation will change.

Americans can manage American affairs on its own soil.

But when they wander abroad, as we learned from the late lamented Woodrow Wilson, and get into the hands of European statesmen, there is no knowing what it will cost in men, worry and billions of dollars.

Killed in Committee

The Dangerous Proposal to Abandon Annual Sessions of the Massachusetts Legislature

If you sympathized with the protest which appeared on this page on March 13th last, against the abandonment of Annual Sessions of the Massachusetts Legislature, you will join this newspaper in congratulating those members of the Ways and Means Committee of the Massachusetts House who have just voted down the bill for biennial sessions.

In this Commonwealth the people have come to look upon the annual session as a Massachusetts institution. Without it many of the progressive laws now on the statute books of the State would not be there today.

This fact is well-known to "the Invisible Government," whence comes the greater part of the pressure to substitute Biennial for Annual Sessions.

But readers of this newspaper do not need to be reminded that "Eternal Vigilance Is the Price of Liberty."

Come next year, the attempt to abolish Annual Sessions will be renewed.

Public sentiment, therefore, must be on guard.

The wise voter will continue to support those candidates for the Legislature who are outspoken in their opposition to the abandonment of a Massachusetts institution which has stood the test of time—the annual legislative session on Beacon Hill.

Way Down East

Still Digging Themselves Out of the Snow!

In the early days of official Spring a considerable part of Northern New England still is snowbound. There probably has not been such a late season within the lifetime of the oldest inhabitant. We may all be feeling the effects of it, a few months hence, in higher prices of native foodstuffs.

Photographs recently at hand from the region about Ellsworth, Maine, recall Joseph Grismer, Phebe Davis and "Way Down East." Postmaster Higgins of Ellsworth, from whose office several R. F. D. carriers drive out every morning, calls the Winter now officially ended the "worst Winter in many years."

Automobiles and motor trucks having replaced the horse, it was difficult to round up teams to break open the roads. The snow, especially along the seashore, was packed in hard. One R. F. D. man "spoiled" a horse.

Most of the enterprising towns of the three Northern States have placed orders for tractor plows, if they are not thus equipped already. It was a particularly bad Winter for towns which thought to "hire" plows. The big neighbor, with miles of streets of its own to break out, could do little for smaller places around about.

Here is hoping Miss Spring will be the gentle creature the poets have advertised, but won't the entire U. S. A. be ready for an old-fashioned New England Summer!

Cartoons

The truest history lies in cartoons.

Because past civilizations were devoid of cartoons, we know so little of the really important part of their existence, namely, what the common people did and thought.

History gives the mountain peaks; cartoons the cross section.

History is serious. It has no time to portray the little bits of humor that reveal the mind of the "just folks," men and women whose progress is the true story of an age.

Cartoons, seeking mainly the humorous human frailties of a time, mirror a truer picture of human nature at that period than any other medium.

Future civilizations desiring to get an understanding of our time will do well to turn to our cartoons.

Buy Now for Easter

Have you done your Easter shopping?

If you have not, do not wait. The same reasons apply as to Christmas buying. You get a better selection. You get better attention. And you are being generally helpful, by realizing that store owners and employes are just human beings, and can only do a certain amount of work in a given time.

Give them a chance.

SCIENCE EXPLAINS FORMING OF ICE

By Garrett P. Serviss

Noted Astronomer and Writer on Scientific Topics of Popular Interest.

"Please tell me why water expands when it solidifies into ice.—W. B."

BECAUSE the molecules of water take up a more open formation when they assume the crystalline state called ice. There are relatively few substances that do this. The great majority contract instead of expanding when they solidify.

If you ask why nature made these differences, you ask more than science can answer. It is possible to go deeper toward primal causes in some cases than in others, but always there is a final "why?" to which the only response is: "That is the way it works in nature."

It is well to keep this philosophical consideration in mind, as a corrective to the notion that science now knows everything, and can "go it alone"—a notion, it is hardly necessary to say, that real science does not entertain about itself.

Consists of Crystals

If you will watch still water when it begins to freeze you will see delicate needles of ice forming on its surface and spreading about. These have a crystalline form, in accordance with what is called the hexagonal system, and this form becomes more manifest, and displays its full beauty, in snow-flakes and in the exquisite figures formed by freezing moisture on window-panes. All ice consists of crystals of this kind, though they are concealed from ordinary observation in great masses of solid ice.

Crystallization is a form of solidification; i. e., the passage from the liquid to the solid state. In the crystal the molecules arrange themselves in certain definite geometrical patterns, different substances following different systems, though there is not a separate system for each substance, but many substances fall under a single system.

The tendency of the molecules to arrange themselves in accordance with the particular crystalline system to which the substance belongs manifests itself in the case of water as soon as the temperature has descended to the "freezing point," or 32 degrees Fahrenheit. In cooling the water has given out a part of the heat energy which had kept its molecules in the relatively free state that characterizes a liquid, and prevented the crystallizing force from action. Thereupon the latter force begins to prevail, and the molecules fall into definite ranks, and arrange themselves in a more open order, thus taking up more room, just as a formless, close-packed crowd, suddenly changed into military squadrons, covers an increased area of ground.

It is the increase of space required by the molecules when arranged in crystals that causes the ice to occupy more room than the water from which it was formed. The total increase of volume, or bulk, is about one-eleventh. That is to say, the space than it occupied when in the frozen form takes one-eleventh more space than it occupied when in the liquid state. But all kinds of crystallized substances do not occupy more space than the same substances in the liquid state. On the contrary, as already stated, the majority of substances contract on solidifying. Cast iron however, follows the water rule.

Great Power

The expansion of water in freezing becomes a source of great rending power in nature. The minute ice-crystals uniting their forces in the crevices of mountain walls outrival dynamite as agents of destruction.

They pry and break off the faces of precipices, and send their fragments down to build up immense heaps of "talus" at the foot of the walls, as may be seen along the base of the Palisades of the Hudson, where the 400 and the 800 foot cliffs are in places covered at the bottom with sloping banks of talus reaching up a quarter or a third of the total height.

Ice, of course, would not float if it were not bulkier than its own weight of water. If you chance to meet an iceberg you can reflect on the fact that about one-ninth of its entire bulk is under water, perhaps just grazing the bottom, if it happens to be over the Banks of Newfoundland. In lake water it would sink deeper, for sea-water is heavier than fresh water.

LISTEN, WORLD!

By ELSIE ROBINSON

MYRTLE EVANS thinks her husband is a brute. All the neighbors agree with her.

"Lookit how that girl waits on him hand and foot!" say the neighbors, "and the way she plans and schemes so's everything will always be pleasant for him. Yet he talks to her the way I wouldn't talk to a dog. And the more she gives in and tries to please him the worse he acts. I'd just like to see MY husband treat me that way! He actually acts as if he didn't have a mite of respect for—his own wife!"

Your powers of analysis are 100 per cent. perfect, neighbors, dear. He not only acts as if he didn't have any respect for her—he HASN'T ANY RESPECT FOR HER.

AND IT'S THE LADY'S OWN FAULT!

Now, before any more blood is spilled, let's make this argument general. We're not about to discuss merely the case of Myrtle and Bert Evans. We are going to discuss all people who don't get the respect they think is due them and the reason they don't get it. The mean facts which will now follow will apply quite as well to Tom, Dick and Harry beefing about their treatment in the office as they apply to Myrtle who beefs about her treatment in the home.

So now let's go.

What is this respect which Myrtle feels she merits?

Respect is the honor given to those who have earned it. Respect is the payment we accord STRENGTH.

Several Kinds.

Strength may be of several kinds. There is physical strength, mental strength, and spiritual strength. They all command respect.

Why does strength command respect? Why do we respect strong people?

Primarily for a selfish reason. Strong people make it easier for the rest of us. Physically strong people carry heavy material loads. Mentally or spiritually strong people carry heavy mental or spiritual loads. They not only carry their own loads, but they usually carry a proportion of other people's loads. That's one way they help.

They help even more in another way. They help by not bothering. They don't expect us to do their jobs for them—they do them themselves. They don't get in the way or muddle our plans by their mistakes or irritate us by their weaknesses or dependence.

That's why we like strong people. That's why we give strong people respect.

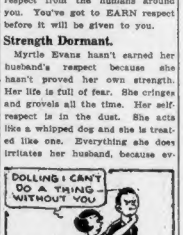
And by the same token, that's why we DON'T like weak, timid clinging people—people who don't stand on their own hind legs—people who lean on our wills instead of on their own. We may pity and help them, but we don't like or respect them.

That's why Bert Evans doesn't respect his wife.

The neighbors think he ought to respect her, because she is his wife. But respect doesn't come that way. Being cheated a wife, or a superintendent, or a president won't insure respect from the humans around you. You've got to EARN respect before it will be given to you.

Strength Dormant.

Myrtle Evans hasn't earned her husband's respect because she hasn't proved her own strength. Her life is full of fear. She cringes and grovels all the time. Her self-respect is in the dust. She acts like a whipped dog and she is treated like one. Everything she does irritates her husband, because everything she does throws the burden of his life more tiresomely upon him. The meeker she is, the greater nuisance does she become.



You may say that Bert Evans is a selfish, unkind brute. Perhaps he is. But that doesn't change the fact that his wife is a spineless enveller and is getting the treatment which is always accorded spineless enivellers.

"But," you protest, "that doesn't always apply. There's the new foreman down at the works. That guy yells his head off and yet he doesn't get any respect either. He's always threatening to knock the block off some fellow, but they all laugh at him. How do you explain that?"

Same old explanation, friend. Your new foreman is as much of a coward in his way as Myrtle Evans is in hers. That kind of noisy bullying is founded on fear as truly as is snivelling. Your foreman isn't really brave or resolute inside—he isn't sure of himself. He's depending on your opinion of him as much as Myrtle depends on her husband's opinion of her. In his heart he is not sure of himself and he tries to hide his fear under a great pretence of strength.

DEALING WITH CAUSE OF THINGS

By DR. FRANK CRANE

ONE of the tests used in a certain insane asylum to ascertain a patient's recovery of sanity was as follows:

The patient was put in a room in which were a mop and a faucet. From the faucet water was left running on the floor.

If he seized the mop and tried to wipe up the water he was still insane. If he turned off the faucet he was judged sane.

If he dealt only with effects and did not go back to causes he was considered to be still mentally defective.

Dealing with causes was the sign of intellectual balance.

Judging on this basis, this old world has a very small percentage of sanity in its dealing with the problems that confront it.

Take the problem of the criminal and the insane. We, as a nation, spend hundreds of millions on institutions supported for their care. But in the majority of States any dangerous criminal or moron can lawfully be married and propagate descendants who from birth are freighted with menace to society.

In the matter of divorces legislators seek stricter laws, but pay little attention comparatively to one of the sources of trouble—the lax marriage laws.

Strikes are treated very much in the manner of the old negro's leaky roof. He said when it rained he couldn't fix it and when it wasn't raining it didn't need fixing.

When confronted with a big strike we wake up and do anything to tide over the crisis. Then during the intermittent periods of calm between strikes little is done to find a saner basis of relationship between employer and employe.

The regulation of immigration into this country concerns itself primarily with the problems at the port of entry and very little with the investigation of the character of the immigrant in his own country.

On the whole, our medical system is based on the treatment of effects, dealing with people who are already sick, instead of improving the health of the people who are not sick.

In many other everyday dealings, both socially and individually, we grab the mop, but let the faucet run.

WHY YOU SHOULD NOT ENVY THE DISHONEST RICH

It has always been a matter of pride and comfort to you to know that what little you have accumulated of this world's goods is honestly yours.

No unfairness nor sharp-practice can be laid at your door.

You owe no man and you have worked for what you have.

But recently another thought has crept in.

You have begun to balance your clean record against the known rascality of certain men you know who have placed themselves in well-to-do circumstances through their dishonesty.

They seem to be having a far better time than you, with their opportunities to travel and mingle with prosperous people—and you wonder if honesty pays.

Those men of unscrupulous methods seem to have hosts of friends.

And then you begin to consider all the wealthy men you know and you perhaps form the opinion that one must be a little shady to gain riches.
